Blase, Uneasy U.S. Reaches Out for Moon

By RUDY ABRAMSON

Colonist Los Angeles Times Service

CAPE KENNEDY — The United States this week commits its national pride and a $24-billion-dollar-engineering effort to showing the world it can still fulfill a dream.

It will send three men on a human adventure of mythological proportions, with the whole of the civilized world invited to watch — for better or worse.

Just a little more than eight years after John Kennedy proposed the incredible voyage, Apollo 11 is about to take off for man's first landing on the moon. The journey — to begin with the launching here at 6:32 a.m. Pacific Daylight

COUNTDOWN To the Moon

Time Wednesday — is fraught with perils understood by few except the astronauts who must face them.

The people who have brought Project Apollo to its climax believe the event will leave an indelible impression on the psyche of man, uplifting his horizons like no other exploration in history.

At the very least, they say, the safe return of the first expedition to the moon will show the world the United States still has the sense of purpose to marshal and direct its vast resources toward very distant and difficult goals.

It will show what Kennedy felt the world had to know: that the United States would lead in opening the space age.

"What a tragedy it would be," a space official said recently, "if we had left the Russians to explore the moon and all we had to offer the world was Vietnam."

Nevertheless, many have come to look upon Project Apollo as a tragedy itself, where the United States dreamed the wrong dream and squandered its talent and its wealth on an empty adventure.

A public opinion poll to be published this week will show the majority of Americans still are dubious about the race for the moon, even on the brink of its thrilling climax.

A contingent of Poor People plans to picket the launch centre to dramatize their own status against the background of the costly moon program.

Both social and physical scientists see myriad reasons for the mixed feelings Americans now have about exploring the moon. They sense there is far more excitement about it in other parts of the world than there is in the United States.

"Americans can be almost too blase and sophisticated," said Dr. David Reisman, professor of social sciences at Harvard. "For some people the more things you can reject the more sophisticated you are."

Science fiction has so well predicted what is now happening, the events themselves become almost anticlimactic. The upcoming landing on the moon has been described in detail so many times it

Borman:

Orbiting Stations

Red Goal

CAPE KENNEDY Fla. (UPI) — Apollo 8 commander Frank Borman said Saturday Soviet President Nikolai Podgorny told him Russia plans to put large manned space stations in orbit around the moon.

Borman, reporting on his recent 10-day tour of the Soviet Union, said that launch timetables were not discussed, but "my impression is that the Russian space program is about on a parallel to ours, at least as to designs and future hopes."

"The president of the U.S.S.R. told me that they would have large space stations, manned space stations, that they would put into orbit around the moon."

"MORE FLIGHTS"
"He told me they were continuing the space program with vigor and that there would be many more manned flights."

Borman said he got the impression the Soviets also are actively engaged in a manned lunar landing effort, "and not only manned lunar landings, but also planets."

He also said he got the definite feeling that "they're hard at work right now on large space stations. This is nothing that I was told directly, but my own appraisal of the situation is that you'll probably see an active program with some large launches in the near future."

Borman resigned as an astronaut in May and is now heading a U.S. space agency task group working on development of large American space stations in Earth orbit.

"Before members of the U.S. Congress get too excited by the propaganda of the Irish-American lobby," he said, "let them ask themselves how they would like the spectacle of an Irish child flying from a house."

He said the Northern Ireland government would not be pushed into an Irish republic by threats from a "lunatic minority."

He gave no specific date for the planned visit to the United States.

Boat Flips, Search Launched

VANCOUVER (CP) — The armed forces Rescue Co-ordination Centre here said early today a search has been launched for two or possibly three persons missing after a small speedboat overturned off the west coast of Vancouver Island.

Sketchy details indicated there were nine or 10 persons on the boat when it capsized near Seal Rocks at Long Beach.

A vessel in the area arrived on the scene after a general marine broadcast was issued by the Rescue Co-ordination Centre and picked up an unknown number of survivors.

Soviet Tongue Misses Cheek

MOSCOW (AP) — Radio Moscow said Saturday night the pop music world has gone wild over Russia, and cited the Beatles' hit, Back in the U.S.S.R., to prove it.

In a documentary, Radio Moscow quoted British pop singer Mary Hopkin as saying: "Now everything connected with Russia is fashionable."

A narrator said the Beatles' John Lennon knows what makes a hit, and that because of the Russian trend the Beatles produced their Back in the U.S.S.R. song.

The Beatles recording was then played on the air, probably to the delight of Russian young people who rarely hear Beatles music on Soviet radio stations.

The whole song was played, including a line saying: "I'm back in the U.S.S.R., you don't know how lucky you are."

The narrator's introduction to the song said the words concerned "the good fortune to come to the Soviet Union, and the good fortune to be a Soviet cosmonaut."

Kelsey Bay Men On Job Monday

KELSEY BAY — A spokesman for MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. said Saturday the company will reopen its Kelsey Bay logging division on Vancouver Island Monday morning after being shut down since Wednesday.

The company said it was been assured by Local 1-363 of the International Woodworkers of America that its 350 members employed at the division will return to work "in the normal manner" including working overtime as necessary.

MacMillan Bloedel shut down the Kelsey Bay division because of what it called a persistent slowdown which had cut production by 40 per cent.

'No Vote Until U.S. Goes'

TOKYO (UPI) — North Vietnam said today free elections are impossible in South Vietnam so long as U.S. troops are there. The official North Vietnamese news agency, in a transmission monitored here, said current withdrawal of a portion of U.S. troops from South Vietnam was being done only to placate anti-war feeling in the United States.

The dispatch repeated Hanoi's demand for formation of a coalition government with Viet Cong representatives in Saigon as a preliminary to calling elections. South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu has offered to allow Communist candidates in an election but has rejected their demand that they be taken into the government beforehand.

The men voted Saturday to return to work at what was described as a "boisterous meeting" in Campbell River. The secret ballot vote was passed by a 67-per cent majority.

President of Local 1-363, Max Salter told the Colonist the vote included the condition that the company "would do its best to solve outstanding problems."

He said there were a number of these, including the issue of pay for some union members who had worked the Victoria Day holiday. Mr. Salter said reports of the issue concerning the July 1 holiday were erroneous. He denied there had been any work slowdown policy, and blamed "damned poor management" by the company for production decreases.

Mr. Salter said some workers who had returned to work in such places as Victoria might have difficulty in returning to Kelsey Bay by Monday morning. He said he had been assured by the company, however, that employees in this position would not be penalized.

Elsewhere, striking miners withdrew pickets at Kaiser Resources Ltd. operations at Natal Saturday in the face of contempt of court proceedings by the British Columbia Supreme Court.

Officials of the United Mineworkers of America urged the 110 strikers to comply with a B.C. Supreme Court injunction after Mr. Justice F. Craig Munro said contempt proceedings would be brought against the pickets.

However, it was not known whether the miners' decision would lead to a resumption of

Russia Blames China

Border Talks Broken Off

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union accused China of breaking off talks Saturday aimed at solving shipping problems in the disputed frontier region between the two countries.

"The leader of the Chinese delegation refused to continue the conference," said the official Soviet news agency, Tass, "and made malicious attacks on Soviet representatives."

Tass said the conference by a mixed Soviet-Chinese commission was held at Khabarovsk to settle navigation problems on the Amur, Ussuri, Argun and Sungach rivers and Lake Hanko.

"The commission was to discuss practical questions concerning the creation of normal shipping on the frontier sections of rivers between the Soviet Union and the P.R.C. (Peoples Republic of China)," Tass said.

It said the Chinese delegation tried to discuss a border line on the rivers and wanted to revise a 1953 Soviet-Chinese agreement, while the Russian delegation "was trying to keep the conference from deviating from the discussion of practical matters relating to navigation."

"It was in order to frustrate the conference that the Chinese authorities staged on July 8 an armed attack on Soviet river workers on Goldensky Island," Tass said.

It said the Chinese refusal Saturday to continue the conference was "a new hostile act on the part of China, an act which is part of the continued provocative actions of the Chinese side."

Fire Bombs, Stones

Fighting Marks 'Glorious 12th'

LURGAN, Northern Ireland (AP) — Gasoline bombs and stones were hurled in the streets of Lurgan Saturday as Northern Ireland's Protestants staged their Orange Day march. Six persons, three of them policemen, went to hospital.

Most of Northern Ireland was peaceful as an estimated 100,000 marchers celebrated the "Glorious 12th" but in Londonderry about 150 youths threw up street barricades and skirmished with police Saturday night.

Minor scuffles broke out in Belfast where 35,000 marchers took to the streets, celebrating the 279th anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne, where Protestant King William defeated Roman Catholic King James I. Trouble erupted in Lurgan, 20 miles from Belfast, when Protestants and Roman Catholics clashed over a Union Jack flying from a house.

Police, using batons, charged the crowds. Slicks, stones and bottles of gasoline were thrown. One policeman was splattered with blazing gasoline but escaped unhurt. Five persons were arrested.

Police reported other marches throughout the north were peaceful and uninterrupted. In the Belfast parade, more than 2,000 of the marchers had come from Scotland, the United States, Canada and Australia.

At a demonstration by the Orange Institute at Moneymore, Prime Minister James Chichester-Clark announced he would visit the United States in September to try to "counter" and some of the vicious propaganda levelled against Ulster in recent months.

Chichester-Clark denounced what he called a propaganda campaign by Irish expatriates in the United States which he said was aimed at reducing American investment in Northern Ireland.

The campaign, he said, was being waged by "Irish-American bigots" who were enemies of Ulster and Britain.

Tools Stolen From Prison

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — A thief broke into the Oregon State Penitentiary Annex early Saturday morning and made off with $1,500 worth of tools.

State police said they believed the burglary was the work of an inmate of the minimum security annex.

Dream of Ages?

almost seems it has already happened.

Apollo flights up until now have gone so perfectly it is easy to make the dangerous assumption that Apollo II will go just as smoothly.

The generation that has grown up in the years of Apollo has been bombarded by great scientific and technological achievements so constantly that nothing is really amazing any more.

Perhaps the most impressive thing about the Apollo program is that it has continued to press forward through some of the most turbulent years in U.S. history. The bold project has reached its payoff when people are deeply preoccupied with poverty, urban decay, crime in the streets, and the long war in Vietnam.

Although going to the moon removes some attention from the United States' domestic problems, the importance of leading the Russians in space no longer seems so great.

Since Apollo hit its stride, there has really been no moon race with the Soviets. The U.S.S.R. is apparently nowhere near ready to land men on the lunar surface.

"We have this idea that we have to push forward and first something all the time," said Charles Palmer, former student body president at Berkeley, who will be a Yale law student this fall. "It seems we have to do this to stay together."

"But this is a perversion when we are pouring so much of our resources into what may be a worthless hunk of rock. It's almost the American dream run wild."

"There is nothing wrong with going to the moon. What is wrong is that it is so high in priority. We're committing all these resources to nothing when we could be doing something else."

Sources familiar with the federal budget-making process are quick to point out the fallacy of assuming—that taking money away from the moon program would mean more money for urban problems.

"But," said Gerald Piel, publisher of Scientific American, "over the period of eight years people have had a chance to see what the real costs of space exploration are. Now maybe we are ready to start opening up some new bank accounts."

Werner von Braun and other proponents of manned spaceflight have suggested that the race into space may someday become a psychological substitute for war—a new kind of yardstick by which to measure a nation's wealth, industrial capacity and knowhow.

If this is going to be the case, the trend is not yet apparent. The United States and the Soviet Union have gone ahead with more and more sophisticated weapons systems even in the midst of the space race.

Piel suggests the space race may have even had the opposite effect, that the engineering sophistication generated by flying in space has made it possible to develop even more weapons technology.

In the long run the importance of Apollo is the general capability it has developed to live and operate in space, to set long-term goals and surmount the technical obstacles to carrying them out.

When the project is viewed in this light, the moon becomes sort of a carrot before the donkey, a convenient means of deciding how far and how fast the country should move in space exploration.

operations. The company is normally shut down on weekends and the next regular shift was to report for work at midnight tonight. About 450 underground miners and 850 construction workers building facilities to produce coal for Japan had refused to cross the lines.

Mr. Justice Munroe issued an injunction Thursday against the miners, ordering an end to picketing which started Tuesday in a wildcat walkout over wages.

Meanwhile, federal Labor Minister Bryce Mackasey says he sees no need to interfere in the dispute between B.C. Telephone Co. and the striking 6,600 member of the Federation of Telephone Workers of B.C.

"If the opportune moment arises, we might step in, but at this moment I can see no need," Mr. Mackasey said in a telephone interview from Banff.

"I have every confidence in Don Tysoe (chief federal conciliation officer in B.C.), and I can't see that this dispute warrants my personal intervention or, for that matter, intervention now by the department."

There were no developments Saturday in the strike by 550 members of the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers union against six major oil companies in the Lower Mainland or the lockout of 800 meatcutters and about 3,000 grocery clerks which led to the closure of 103 supermarkets in the Greater Vancouver area May 24.

But Flames Unlike Those of 1956

Opposition Fueling Commons Fire

By RICHARD JACKSON
Colonist Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Having brought Prime Minister Trudeau to a bad-tempered boil, the Opposition is furiously fueling the parliamentary fire.

In the Conservative-New Democratic eye there's the gleam of hope that the flames could climb so high as to consume Parliament itself, and ultimately the government.

The opposition is living in the warm memory of 1956 when they set such an anti-government blaze across the land that the Liberals, after 22 years of power, were burned to death in the election that followed a year later.

They're even thinking, Conservative whip Tom Bell confides, of "forcing Mr. Speaker to throw one of us out of the house."

He possibly may not be speaking seriously — but even if he is sounding off in partial jest it does indicate clearly that the thought of offering a "martyr" on the altar of government "arrogance" has occurred.

Just exactly that happened 13 years ago when Toronto Tory MP Donald Fleming, later to become finance minister, deliberately contrived to have himself expelled from the House for "defiance" of Mr. Speaker Rene Baudouin.

Hamilton Conservative MP Ellen Fairclough, who was to become health minister, heightened the drama by driving a Union Jack over Donald Fleming's empty desk.

The incident piled fuel on a fire that destroyed Mr. Speaker and the government of Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent and put the Conservatives under John Diefenbaker in power for the first time since 1935.

This time, though, if they do re-enact this provocative parliamentary stunt, allows Tory whip Bell, they'll "slap the Union Jack bit."

The idea would be to fan public interest in the rules debate to a fever pitch of emotional involvement and stimulate a national resentment of the government.

But the rules debate is not the gas pipeline issue. And this is 1969, not 1956.

The biggest difference perhaps is Mr. Speaker.

Thirteen years Mr. Speaker Baudouin was in the chair, scoured out of his seat by Jack Pickersgill who told him how to read the parliamentary rule book, dream up entirely new Commons regulations, go along obediently with the gagging of the Opposition by closure, and even wipe an entire day from the parliamentary record.

Poor Rene Baudouin, you can see him in your mind's eye even now.

Pickersgill had gone to his home and read him the government's riot act.

Rene Baudouin must do as he was told — or else. He did it, but in the doing, he suffered a suspected heart spasm right there in the chair and Dr. J. J. McCallan, then national revenue minister, rushed to his side with some TNT-packed cardiac pills.

But Mr. Speaker Lucien Lamoureux isn't a Rene Baudouin.

He doesn't panic. And he takes orders from nobody — not even the irascible Pierre Elliott Trudeau.

In fact, as he did Friday, he can humble the haughty prime minister and make him swallow his own intemperate words.

Lucien Lamoureux is the coolest cat that ever sat on Parliament's throne because he knows his House of Commons stuff and has the heart, mind and sheer guts to stand his ground.

Friday, as those flames mounted in the House with members on their feet howling in a great uproar of anger and fire's breath, Lucien Lamoureux hosed them down with calm and cold reason.

He put out the fire. Order was restored.

For a time it was dicey — and any other speaker who has presided in these last 30 years might have lost control — but Lucien Lamoureux had the last word and made it stick.

But apart from Mr. Speaker's diamond-hard qualities, there are other differences between '56 and '69.

Donald Fleming is missing from the House. So too is M. J. Coldwell, the long-relied CCF leader whose fury, blazing hotly from such a calm

Assembly-Line Vs Custom Job

By DAVE MCINTOSH

OTTAWA (CP) — The current Commons struggle is basically between the assembly-line product and the custom-made article.

In effect, the government wants to schedule Commons business so that legislation can be fed through it as through a computer.

"Don't bring your computers in here," says Opposition Leader Robert Stanfield. He is supported by the NDP and Creditists.

NOT SINISTER

There is nothing sinister in the government's proposed rule change which would give it a swifter process of closure than now exists. Proposed rule 75-C would enable the government to put through a bill with only two full days of debate.

Prime Minister Trudeau argues that Parliament needs such a rule if it is to be modernized and be able to cope with the growing flood of legislation. He says that unless Parliament is programmed to deal efficiently with its business, it will always be behind the needs and wishes of the Canadian people.

NOT ENOUGH TIME

The opposition argues that the government must not be given the capability of pushing through a bad piece of legislation after only two days of debate.

It says that two days would not give it enough time to make the country aware of a bad bill. The government says there would be plenty of advance notice of legislation and that there are more avenues than parliamentary speeches for the opposition to make its points with the public.

ABROGANCE

The administration also contends that governments are not defeated because of bad bills but because of general arrogance or incompetence or both.

But, says the opposition, arrogance and incompetence produce bad bills which could — under 75-C — quickly become the law of the land with little warning.

The government is taking its second shot at obtaining a new closure rule, for which the current euphemism is "time allocation."

GRITS CYNICAL

It withdrew after its first try in December.

The Liberals can be quite cynical about the chances of the opposition making any yards with the public in its fight against 75-C.

They point to such events as the Apollo moon landing as taking all public interest from such a mundane subject as a Commons rule change.

For its part, the opposition is well aware that it is having a difficult, if not impossible, task in trying to imprint its view on the public mind, especially during summer vacation time.

But it is prepared to fight anyway, perhaps for weeks.

The fight may well be a morale-builder for the Conservatives.

All Conservative MPs are starting to pull together after their recent division on the official languages bill and the government has apparently given them a cause on which they can close ranks.

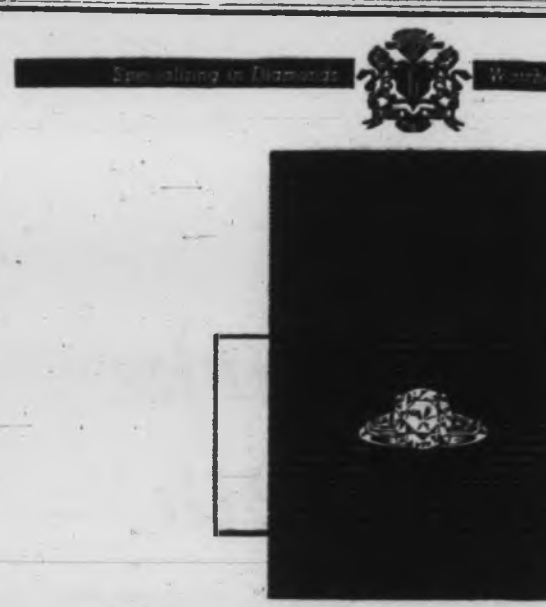

Trudeau Tour Belittled

SASKATOON (CP) — T. C. Douglas, national leader of the New Democratic Party, blamed the federal government for inaction on economic problems and predicted that Prime Minister Trudeau's six-day tour of the prairies won't change anything.

He told the annual convention of the Saskatchewan NDP Saturday.

"Mr. Trudeau doesn't lack information about the situation on the prairies. What he lacks is human concern. He's done nothing about the situation and I don't think he's going to do anything."

Referring to a 5,400-mile swing through Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta that Trudeau is to start Sunday, Douglas said: "He's going to hop from place to place in a helicopter. If I were prime minister and had done as little as he has, I'd stay in a helicopter too."

A Name You Can Trust

Tension Headaches Real

By G. T. THORNTON, M.D.

Dear Dr. Thornton: Will going without food for long periods cause headaches? Many students complain of headache in the late evening and I wonder if this could be the cause. I contend that it is, but most people don't seem to see any connection.

Would you discuss it? It may be of help to parents whose children follow the fad of not eating breakfast. — E.F.

There is such a thing as a "hangry" headache, but in many cases I think it goes a little farther than that.

Some people — a good deal more than we at one time supposed — are subject to some degree of low blood sugar. This may or may not lead to a headache. In some instances, it certainly does.

As to youngsters skipping breakfast, I have opposed that practice for years. I don't know how often it causes a headache before lunchtime, but it certainly does lead to fatigue, lack of attention, and lack of efficiency.

And I could scare up some more valid reasons for not skipping breakfast — it is most unwise for anyone who has any tendency toward duodenal ulcers; it is an utter failure if used as a means of losing weight; it usually is compensated by eating more than is really needed for lunch, and after-lunch drowsiness results.

But to get back to headaches, I have a feeling that the majority of these late-evening headaches among students can be traced less to sheer hunger and more to tension. For tension headaches are very real, indeed.

Whether the tension is from the pressure of concentrated study or worry over whether the lessons are really well-prepared for the next day or from just not enjoying studying, it's still tension.

There can be plenty of tension built up from smoking, and trying to stay awake in a stuffy room, and just from sitting still.

The familiar coffee break, while perhaps overdue in some offices, has a place if it is used judiciously. But it doesn't have to be coffee, necessarily.

Candy That Dropped on Berlin

Flight Brings Sweet Memories

BERLIN (CP) — Candy dropped in tiny parachutes out of the West Berlin sky Saturday.

The sun broke through just before the "chocolate flier" of 20 years ago dropped his tiny bundles to hundreds of children scrambling on the ground below.

It was a less serious time than the days of the Soviet blockade of the city in 1948-49. Then the Russians put a stop to the candy drops being extended into neighboring East Berlin because the children there had written "Uncle Wiggly Wings" that they too liked Americans.

On hand to recreate a poignant moment of history's greatest airlift, that saved Berlin, was Col. Gail S. Halvorsen, a farm boy out of Utah who now commands a satellite tracking unit at Vandenberg Air Force Base in California.

The occasion was an annual Air Force open house at Tempelhof Airfield that this year featured not only American but British and French displays in honor of the joint victory over the blockade two decades ago.

Halvorsen was to make four candy drops during the week-end flying a C-47 Gooney Bird, the Second World War model plane with which the airlift flew its first missions.

As Halvorsen roared over at about 200 feet, crabbing into a gusty wind, West Berlin school children gazed expectantly upward. As the tiny parachutes fluttered to earth with bubble gum, chocolate and other candies, the kids burst onto the drop field to gather up their spoils.

"Just like in the old days," Halvorsen grinned later. For a reporter, he recalled what got him into the candy-dropping business. On a Berlin stopover taking movies of other airlift planes coming in, he noticed the generally poor shape of children standing at the end of the runway. "They did not ask for candy but when I divided two sticks of gum into four pieces, the lucky four acted like kings. There just was no candy or gum to be had in Berlin in those days."

So, strictly against regulations, I started dropping candy bundles with my own handkerchiefs as I came into Berlin. To signal the kids it was me, I wiggled my wings. A newspaperman got wind of the story and saved me from maybe real trouble by giving it a lot of publicity. The next thing you know, I was getting bags of handkerchiefs in the mail because I had run out. And pretty soon people in the States and West Germany were preparing candy bundles and my whole squadron was in the act. When East Berlin children started writing to him to wiggle his wings and drop them some candy, too, which Halvorsen did, the Russians became furious.

"They complained to the State Department," the veteran pilot recalled, "and the State Department told me to quit." It was the first time Halvorsen, now 48, had flown a C-47 in a dozen years. As he roared in for a candy drop pass, a Berliner of about 28 peered into the sky and remarked to himself but aloud: "Man, those were real times."

Another Juneau In Fleet

BREMERTON, Wash. (AP)—The third U.S. Navy ship to bear the name Juneau was commissioned at the Puget Sound naval shipyard Saturday with Robert Ward, Alaska secretary of state, as principal speaker.

The $25,000,000 amphibious assault ship is the most modern addition to the navy-marine corps team. Troops of a battalion can be flown rapidly to combat areas ashore from her helicopter deck.

The first two Juneaus were light cruisers. The original one, named for Alaska's capital, after earning five battle stars went down off Guadalcanal in 1942 when hit by two Japanese torpedoes. Only 10 of her crew survived.

The second Juneau served in the Korean war, earning five battle stars. She was decommissioned in 1956 and her name stricken from the fleet list in 1959.

Vietnam Target Cancelled

Forgotten GI Wants Discharge

PORTERVILLE, Calif. (LAT) — Because he volunteered for Vietnam service, PFC. Richard Beatty was sent home from Europe for Christmas leave in 1967.

But through a U.S. army snafu, he has not reached Vietnam and now he hopes he won't have to go.

Much has happened — some good, some not so good — to the soldier the army "forgot" for nearly 18 months.

The handsome, heavily bearded Beatty recalled in his home here recently that he was serving as a reconnaissance scout with the 2nd Armored Cavalry in Germany when an army notice listed reconnaissance scouts among the "critical needs" in Vietnam.

come he asked the local recruiting officer what to do. "He told me to contact the classification and reassignment section in the Pentagon," Beatty said. "When I called them they told me I'd get a reporting date in the mail."

But it didn't come. In the meantime, because of his uncertain status, he ran into difficulties trying to get a job and he was not getting his army pay.

The bills piled up.

"I owe my dad lots of money — an awful lot," he said. In desperation, Beatty lied about his service status to get a job at a sawmill.

He went back to high school when he could, hoping to make up enough work to graduate.

When his two-year enlistment ended Feb. 9, without any word from the army, Beatty hired attorney William Hill to help clarify his situation.

Hill appealed to Rep. Robert Mathias (R-Calif.), who learned that the army could not act on Beatty's appeal for a discharge until he reported to Ft. Ord, Calif.

Again he had to drop out of high school and when news stories began to appear about the "forgotten GI," Beatty said he expected to be fired from his job at the sawmill.

"But my boss was very understanding — told me to come to work when I could." He also found officers at Ft. Ord sympathetic.

After serving 10 days on guard duty there, he was given leaves of 30 days and 20 days twice while the army considered his case.

Two weeks ago the army ruled that he would have to serve another year and ordered him to report to Ft. Ord last Saturday.

He reported but by Monday he was home again, this time on a five-day leave. He sought to investigate the possibility of getting his discharge.

Through attorney Paul Halvonick of the American Civil Liberties Union, Beatty has obtained a court order prohibiting the army from sending him to Vietnam until a hearing is held July 22.

And if that fails to gain the discharge, Beatty indicated he may seek a hardship discharge.

'Nothing to Say' Widow Replies

SAIGON (UPI) — Anna Chennault, widow of the Second World War Flying Tiger chief, named by author Theodore White as influencing the 1968 presidential elections, said Saturday she had "nothing to say" of the report.

"The public must wait for my book about Vietnam which is coming out soon," said Mrs. Chennault.

SEEKING FRIENDS The former Anna Chan said she was in Saigon visiting friends. However, during this week she told UPI on several occasions she was "attending very important meetings."

In his book, The Making of the President, 1968, White reported that Mrs. Chennault was intimately involved in last year's presidential campaign by strengthening South Vietnamese government resistance to peace talks. Mrs. Chennault was a Republican campaign worker during the election campaign. American embassy sources said Mrs. Chennault "travelled frequently to and from South Vietnam from the United States but always stayed with Chinese friends and relatives in Saigon."

"Mrs. Chennault said Saturday that 'I am getting kind of sick and tired of these reports. All I can say is I don't have anything to report now. I am visiting friends and the public must wait for my book.'"

Mrs. Chennault said she had no title for the book on Vietnam nor any date for publication. But she said, "It is concerned with news, and not with history."

Mrs. Chennault did not deny any of the allegations made by White, but said rather, "I am a Chinese-American, but first of all an American. Now we have a president and we must support him."

U.S. Camp Struck By Rockets

SAIGON (UPI) — The U.S. military command reported Saturday that Communist rockets had struck a U.S. 9th Infantry Division base camp 37 miles southwest of Saigon and killed one American soldier and wounded seven who were to have left for the United States today.

The delayed announcement of the Thursday action coincided with announcement that 800 more troops of the 9th Division will be withdrawn from Vietnam today. They will fly from Bien Hoa air force base to McCord air force base, Wash.

Military spokesmen said two Americans were killed and 21 other servicemen and a civilian wounded when a 107-m.m. rocket landed near the 9th Infantry Division centre where soldiers are being processed for their return to the United States. The soldier who was killed and the seven who were wounded were to have left for home. The other soldier killed and the 10 wounded were members of the 3rd Brigade of the 9th which will remain in Vietnam.

Mideast Anxiety Rises

U.S. Negotiator Gets to Moscow

By UPI

Joseph Sisco, the United States' top Middle East negotiator, arrived in Moscow Saturday for another U.S.-Russian attempt to find a solution to the Mideast crisis that threatens any day to flare into another all-out war.

As he did, Cairo reported another heavy artillery duel along the Suez Canal near Suez City where the Egyptians Thursday night carried out their most successful commando attack across the waterway since the end of the six-day war in June, 1967.

A Cairo spokesman said Israel started the clash by firing long-range artillery from deep in the Sinai Desert at Suez City. He said Egypt had silenced the fire. FOUR KILLED Israel reported a series of Arab commando forays into Israeli farmland Saturday and said four guerrillas were killed in a clash in the Israeli-occupied Golan Heights area of Syria and in the northern Jordan River valley opposite Jordan.

In Amman, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine reported Arab guerrillas blew up a building in an Israeli seaside resort south of Haifa on Saturday, the Israeli sabbath, and killed or wounded a number of Israeli holidaymakers.

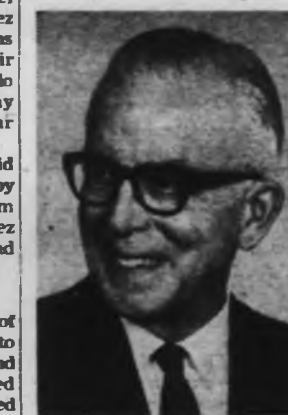

RESORT SKILLED The Israelis said Arab guerrillas shelled the popular Israeli picnic spot at Banyas natural springs, four miles south of the Lebanese border in the Golan Heights, and wounded three civilians with flying shrapnel.

A spokesman in Tel Aviv also said an Israeli soldier wounded Thursday night in an Egyptian commando raid died Saturday, bringing the toll to five in what Israel called Egypt's most successful commando attack since the 1967 war.

The fear in Western capitals was that Israel would be goaded into further reprisals against the Arabs, particularly Egypt.

and Sisco's mission in Moscow was reported aimed at finding a solution before there is even more serious escalation.

The Offenders

MR. RICHARD JACKSON'S article "The Flap Over the Loyal Regiment" which appeared on this page on Thursday and dealt with the fate that befell an offer made by a British army unit to have its band play in Quebec City is likely to have been an eye-opener for a good many Canadians.

Briefly, Mr. Jackson reported that the North Lancashire Regiment—the Loyals—which is coming to Canada for summer training at Camp Petawawa suggested to Canadian Armed Forces headquarters that it might be a nice gesture on its part if it were to send its band to Quebec City to give a concert and perhaps even play for the changing of the guard at the Citadel.

The offer was rejected and permission was refused by CFHQ. Reason? Because it might offend the government and people of Quebec. Why? Because the regiment was also known as "Wolfe's Own" having 210 years ago been part of the British force which stormed the heights to the Plains of Abraham, defeated Montcalm and wrested Canada from French rule.

Incredible as this may seem it was not the only incident of this nature to occur in the last week of June in the hallowed halls of Ottawa.

Only a few days before the "Loyals" were rebuffed Secretary of State Gerard Pelletier sent out instructions across the Dominion that Canada's national flag would not be flown at half-mast on any federal building to mark the funeral of former Governor General and Privy Councillor of Canada, Lord Alexander.

Reason? Because it might offend the government and people of Quebec. Why? Because the funeral happened to fall on the same date as Quebec celebrates the feast day of its patron saint, St. Jean Baptiste.

It is clearly evident from these two episodes that Prime Minister Trudeau's government has become most conscious of the delicacy of feelings of the people of Quebec. It is also quite obvious that it is not at all concerned over the sensitivities of the other people of Canada.

In the light of the changes now being imposed upon this country by his government, Mr. Trudeau might find some guidance in these words by William Shakespeare: "In such a time as this it is not meet that every nice offence should bear his comment."

Car Explosion

CANADA is getting near the stage when one of every three people will be automobile owners. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics shows that there are now over 6,000,000 passenger vehicles on the Canadian roads and that the ownership of cars is growing three times faster than the population.

This is happening despite the trend in the largest cities—namely Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver—against the use of private cars inside the metropolitan areas, because of parking and other difficulties.

In British Columbia the percentage of car owners is far higher than anywhere else in Canada. Out of an estimated population of 2,000,000 there are over 941,000 vehicles registered—enough to make a 50 per cent ownership possible soon.

What all this means is that more tax money will have to be spent on providing wider roads, and more of them. It may also mean in all downtown areas a new policy on parking regulations, and possibly in places like Vancouver a downtown core in which private cars will be restricted.

The problem even for medium-sized cities like Victoria is not an easy one. Street parking meters are gradually being eliminated to speed up the flow of traffic, but the corresponding off-street parking, publicly or privately owned, is either inadequate or too inconvenient to attract the casual visitor.

One solution to overcrowding is a limit on the length of private vehicles, but here there is buyer resistance and the latest B.C. figures show that sales of imported cars—generally the smallest—have not increased on a percentage basis this year over the domestic or generally larger models.

Toronto with its GO trains and other fast public transport facilities is doing a notable job in solving the metropolitan traffic problem, but DBS figures indicate it is not having any great effect on the desire of the Canadian public to have at least one car in every home.

Well, Not Exactly

MR. LEONARD HOPKINS: Mr. Speaker, we have heard this afternoon many spokesmen for the urban areas of Canada. The arguments we heard could be used perfectly well against the further rapid growth of particular areas in Canada which prejudice rural areas and small communities across Canada.

Mr. McCleave: Stamp out Toronto!

PERKINS by John Miles

Slow Mail Service

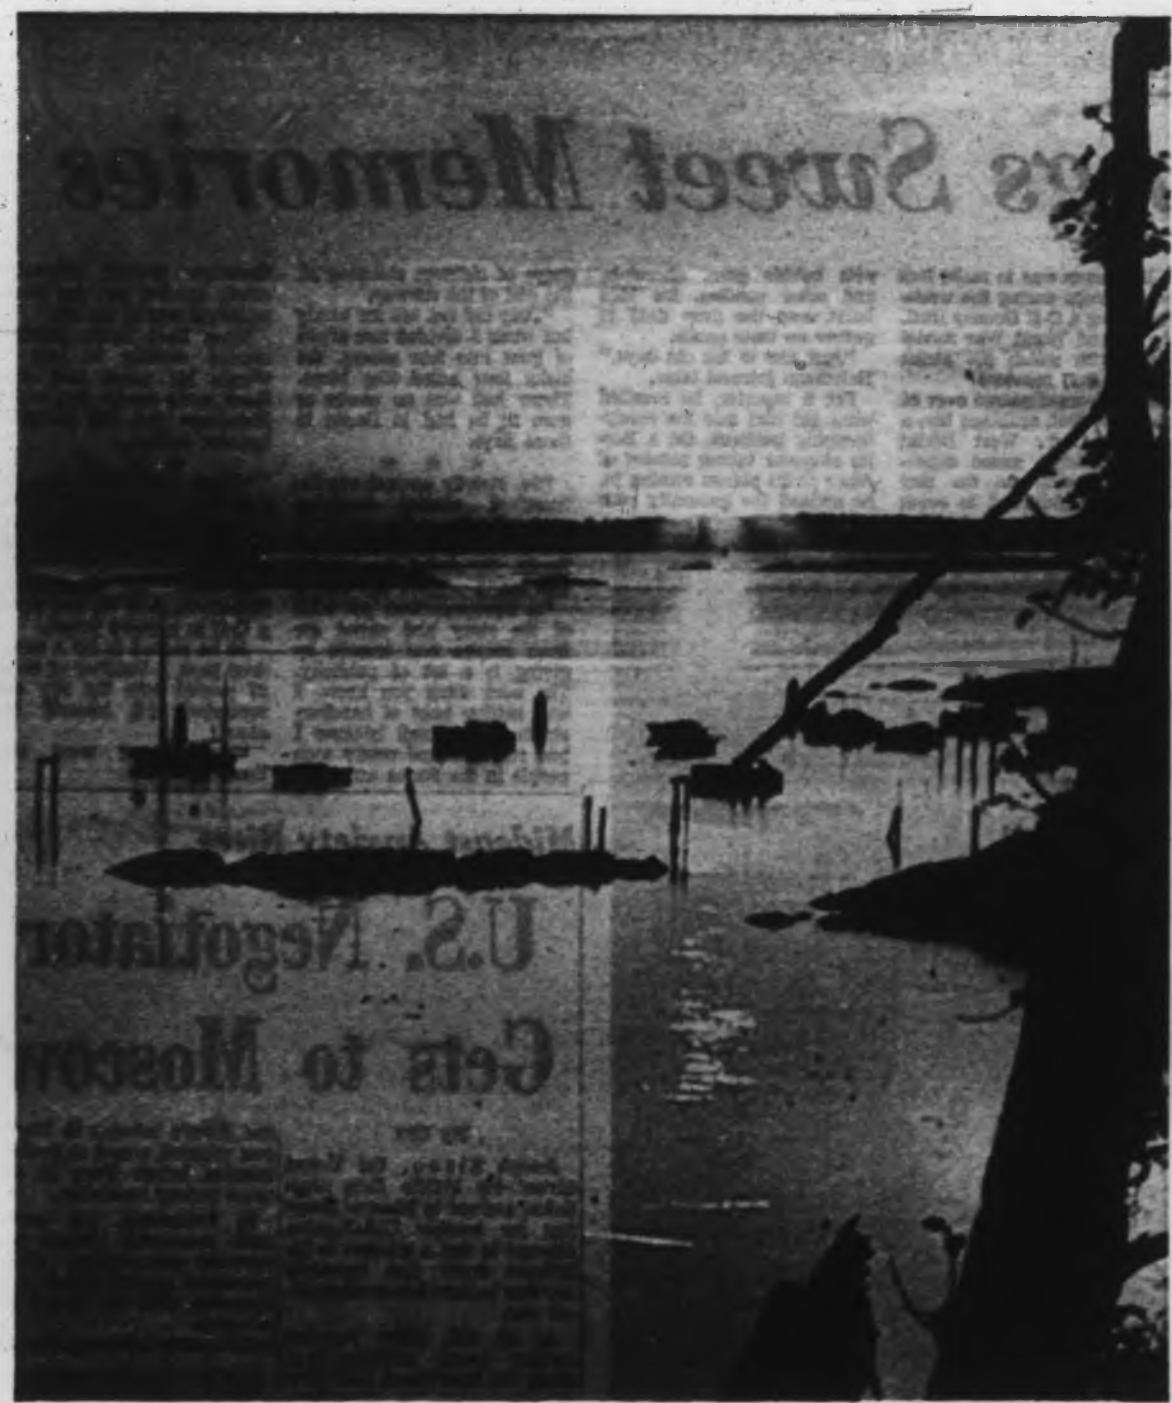

From the Winnipeg Free Press

A LETTER addressed to an urban Winnipeg address, to which an answer was required by Monday, was posted at the Winnipeg central post-office on Thursday. It was delivered to the addressee on Monday, too late for a reply.

A small parcel urgently needed in a Winnipeg office was posted in St. James on Wednesday afternoon. Although the office has a post-office box where mail is collected three times a day—thus having a triple advantage over the ordinary citizen who has to rely on the one daily mail delivery—the parcel arrived only on Friday, together with a letter from Paris, also posted on Wednesday.

One is almost reluctant to mention the latter fact, lest it should move Postmaster-General Eric Kierans to stop such unfair competition and delay overseas mail to match the delays in domestic mail.

The postal services have deteriorated to an extent where they are no longer a joke but a disaster. If Mr. Kierans stays in office much longer we shall reach the level of Latin American countries where every large company, unable to rely on government post-office, runs its own private postal service. However, by then we may be out of NATO which seems to be the postmaster-general's main concern.

Washington Calling

The Danger Signals Are Flying

By MARQUIS CHILDS

AS background for the anti-ballistic missile debate in the U.S. Senate due to begin this week is the record of one of the most curious confusions in the history of a body that has seen so much of human squalor and human nobility. That record is now in the Pentagon being sanitized, which means often that only the blanks are left in a puzzle to be solved by a few specialists with inside knowledge.

Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird became acutely sensitive as he carried the administration load in the ABM controversy, at the suggestion that his estimate of the Soviet missile threat differed from that of Richard Helms, director of the Central Intelligence Agency. Laird told Chairman J. William Fulbright of the Senate foreign relations committee that he would like to see Helms' testimony to show there was no real difference between them.

Fulbright after consulting committee members proposed that the confrontation be in open rather than closed session. This was, of course, impossible, since the CIA director never testifies in public. It was extraordinary enough that he should appear with a high-ranking cabinet officer who had challenged the committee to prove any disagreement between them. For those who have labored to make the CIA a strictly professional, non-political organization this seemed above and beyond the call of duty.

Some months earlier Helms had given the committee a professional estimate—the agreed estimate of the intelligence community—of what the Soviets were doing to build a defensive wall with anti-ballistic missiles. Helms' careful appraisal, in the top-secret category, was very much in the minds of committee members as the two men faced them. The extent of the "Soviet" ABM defense relates directly to Laird's main argument—that the Russians are building a first-strike capability which would wipe out America's Minutemen and make a retaliatory strike impossible.

Helms testified that the Soviet military planned a city-wide defence of Moscow with their ABMs, known in the Pentagon code as Galosh. They had planned to install more than 100 launchers.

But then, and this was the dramatic thrust of Helms' testimony, after 60 to 65 launchers were put in place a halt was called. The best evidence was that Galosh had increased about Galosh's effectiveness. The development was stopped so that with further research a breakthrough might result in a truly defensive weapon. This is the case made by many opponents of the Nixon administration's safeguard ABM, who argue against spending $7 to $11 billion to deploy two missiles when so much doubt still exists as to their capability.

As to the Tullin line around Leningrad, Helms' testimony was similar, although with rather less supporting evidence. Tullin had also been planned as a city-wide defence, using the same, in effect, experimental launchers.

With the confrontation continuing hour after hour, tensions built up in the committee room. Helms squirmed, as one senator put it later, but he did not back down. His original estimate of Soviet ABM capability stood for the record. For a civil servant who has tried with some success to keep out of public controversy it was an extremely difficult position.

After six months in a post as demanding as any in government Laird is the superman. Even those most strongly opposed to his views on ABM and the testing of the multiple-warhead missile, MIRV, take a charitable view of his role, that is what he has been told off to do in a position he certainly did not seek. If he pushes too hard at times—his mother is reported to have said, "Mel, you sound as though you're trying to scare people"—it is the zeal of the earnest, small-town advocate weighted down with a responsibility almost too great for any solitary human being.

His trial by fire comes at a time when, whether he undertakes it or not, the political atmosphere is rapidly changing. A brush with Fulbright at an earlier hearing was indicative. In a preamble to a broad policy statement Laird remarked that responsibility for the nation's security was now his. Fulbright responded by saying that it might be well to realize that the Congress has some share of this responsibility.

How much the commitments resolution, calling on the executive to consult with Congress before committing American men and money to ventures that might mean another Vietnam, really means, the support for it was significant. The vote of 79 to 16 said a lot about attitudes not only on Capitol Hill but in the country. The danger signals are flying as they were flying for Lyndon Johnson before he walked off the scene of battle. Shrewd politician as he was, he failed to read those signals until it was too late. And that may say something to the present occupant of the White House.

Trouble at General Pundits

By FRANK LOWE

THE gloom in the boardroom of General Pundits—the world's top producers of assembly-line opinions—was something to behold that day.

The president, it seems, had just announced that several million of the opinions produced by General Pundits that year would have to be recalled.

"If we don't bring them back to repair them free of charge," the president had said, "the public will lose faith in General Pundits' products."

"Does that include all models, chief?" a vice-president asked. "I mean, surely we won't have to send out a recall order for our prestige model—the Editorial? Say it ain't so, chief."

"I'm sorry," the president said, "but even the Editorial must be recalled, at least some makes. I realize that the Editorial is not our best-selling line—people usually drive them only in funeral parades.

"But think of the bad publicity if a man was killed in a faulty Editorial. Yes, the recall order must go out."

"There was a deadly hush in the boardroom after these words. But eventually the president went on, grimly determined to finish this distasteful task.

"Our reports show," he told his underlings, "that even in our most trusted models are bringing in complaints."

"Even our twin-cam sports model, the Huntley-Brinkley, is having pot-shots taken at it."

"This almost unbelievable bit of news took some digesting. But finally one VP cleared his throat nervously and asked:

"But what about our compact economy model, the James (Scotty) Reston?"

"I mean, that's been every man's favorite for years—surely the Scotty is okay?"

The president of General Pundits bowed his head as though in pain. Then he said: "The world has obviously gone mad. But yes, even the Scotty has brought in complaints. It is just as smooth-running as ever, it seems—but there are complaints."

The gloom in the General Pundits boardroom was deepening with each passing moment. Then the VP-in-charge-of-public-relations had an inspiration.

"Perhaps we should restore public confidence by building our sales campaign around one or two always-popular models. You know, like the Cronkite Special. That has been on the market for years, with some changes, and everybody loves it. His voice trailed off as he looked at his president's face.

"You mean," he choked, "you mean even the Cronkite Special . . . ?"

"Yes, my boy," said the president of General Pundits. "Even the Cronkite Special."

An old VP—he'd been around when the first assembly lines went in at General Pundits—said:

"The trouble with all this is that you young fellows are ruining the Pundits' business. You simply don't build opinions the way we used to build them."

"We built them for the long haul. Take the Lippman model, for instance. Year in, year out—it went on."

"But today you want chrome and flash and a quick trade-in." Naturally, nobody listened to the old VP. Nobody had listened to him for years. So when he had finished the VP-in-charge-of-obsolescence got to his feet.

"What we obviously need, after we bring back our present model—for refurbishing, is a new model. One that will appeal to the young, and those young-in-head."

"A model that will look dashing, but never last for more than a year. After all, if an opinion is good for only one year it won't have to be recalled for adjustment, or tune-up. We'll put it out, watch it zip around for a year and then zap—it won't be around to bug us anymore."

For the first time that day the president of General Pundits managed a smile. "You've done it," he told the VP—in-charge-of-obsolescence. "We're saved."

OUR READERS' VIEWS

To be considered for publication in whole or in part, letters must be on subjects of general interest, and if signed, with post-office address accompanied by writer's name and address. Preference will be given to those that are brief.

Anti-Litter Battle

WE of Outdoors Unlittered were much interested in the letter which appeared in your columns on June 26 criticizing your stand on the non-returnable bottle.

The letter, from Mr. B. W. Brinkworth, president of the B.C. Soft Drink Association, contained many statements with which we agree. From our experience in clean-ups in parks and on beaches in the Greater Victoria area, paper and plastic products may well constitute 50 per cent of the litter. We find more empty beverage cans than any type of bottle. Regardless of the exact percentages, the fact remains that every bottle constitutes a hazard and every beverage can an eyesore. To combat this particular aspect of the litter problem, we still maintain our stand that there should be a worthwhile refund of, say, five cents on each beverage can and bottle.

We agree when Mr. Brinkworth states that anti-litter legislation and education appear to be the answer. Legislation we have, but it is not sufficiently enforced. We are glad to learn that the soft drink industry has made a start in educating the public by marking all their packages with anti-litter messages.

During this last school year, Mr. Allard Van Veen, education director for our organization and experienced in working with young people, started an anti-litter education program in some of the schools on a voluntary basis.

The students showed great interest and enthusiasm for this project as did many educators. The school board is ready to co-operate in any way to set up the program and is willing to give us the use of their facilities.

Mr. Van Veen, a local businessman, is willing to give this program the full-time attention but he naturally cannot do so without a salary.

Here is an opportunity for the provincial government, municipalities, tourist organizations, service clubs, bottling companies, drive-ins and others to get together and do something. Education costs money but by educating our young people we are reaching the adults of tomorrow!

Rockland Rezoning

There is a large source of tax dollars untouched on Rockland Ave. There are acres of land not earning for the city their true tax value and the citizens of Victoria cannot possibly be aware of this bonanza. Why are the citizens asked to pay more taxes when this potential is not developed and not likely to be developed in the near future? Why did the city ask Victorians to borrow millions of dollars when there are thousands which could be obtained if the land was earning its true tax value?

Out of four parcels of land consisting of 7.3 acres the city is collecting taxes amounting to $5,285.32 when the taxpayers of Victoria could have extra tax relief to the value of $125,023.

What makes this area so "top notch" as Mayor Stephen put it? A drive down Rockland Ave. would convince people that there are many acres in Victoria just as appealing, and with just as many homes. So why has the acreage not been developed? The present zoning is "single family dwellings" yet the area is crowded with old homes that have been converted to multiple dwellings.

There is even a private hospital on Rockland Ave. One should note particularly the expanse of a Victorian bank dealer that is slowly rotting away, which could well be the fate of some of the other large old homes on the avenue. But it won't be long till the bushes in front are so thick that this disgrace cannot be seen from Rockland Ave. and the city can breathe a sigh of relief.

So why is the mayor so insistent that Rockland Ave. be maintained as "single family dwellings"? The taxpayer of Victoria, the pensioner on a fixed income, the widow who has a house, a small pension, nothing more, are being victimized. Let's not deprive the people any longer, let's get this area rezoned so Victorians can get a little tax relief.

Loans for Women

The Colonist reported that Mrs. McCarthy, one of the ministers without portfolio in the provincial government, has expressed concern about the difficulty that women who are heads of households have in obtaining mortgage loans. She learned this recently and has written to Ottawa about it.

Mrs. McCarthy has taken a long time to find out about this kind of discrimination against women. It has not been so accidental of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in Canada she would have been aware of the problem at least 14 months ago.

Several weeks ago Mrs. McCarthy, in addressing a meeting of a women's association in Vancouver, said that she had never once thought that women in Canada needed a royal commission. In commenting on these remarks, a local columnist, on May 28 past, reminded us that Mrs. McCarthy had expressed herself in a similar way shortly after the commission was announced, in February of 1967.

The discrimination against women in the matter of mortgages came up for discussion at the very first hearing of the Commission on the Status of Women, which was held in Victoria. This was in April of 1968. As a woman M.L.A. and especially as one who sits in a legislature that meets in Victoria, she should have taken the trouble to attend that hearing.

The problem resolved comment in the press at the time, and from my study of press reports of further hearings across Canada I am pretty sure that the difficulty has been dealt with in at least one brief presentation to the commission.

It appears that Mrs. McCarthy's belated concern over this problem which affects women heads of households is another sign that an election is imminent in British Columbia. (Miss) HILDA MARSHALL.

Declining Dollar

Your editorial of July 3 will probably be quite helpful to civil servant pensioners and a newspaper crusade, nation wide, might produce some interesting results. It might probe the government to act on the joint Senate-Commons committee report of January, 1967, recommending increases in pensions.

It probably would strengthen the argument if you also pointed out that the value of the dollar has continued to decline in value for scores of years. The value, based on the inverse of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics Consumers Price Index (base 1949 prices being equal to 100), has decreased from 123 for the year 1940 to 62.81 for March, 1968, or considerably less than one-half its value, with no indication of slackening in its decline.

I will watch with interest your next editorial on the subject. The civil servant pensioners need all the help they can get.

Money Now Europe's Chief Technical Problem

By JOSEPH KRAFT, from Brussels

"The devil is in the details," says a senior French civil servant who has spent most of the past decade in fruitless haggling over various projects for British membership in the Common Market. And as a new move for British entry to Europe shapes up for this fall, that comment warrants special scrutiny.

For in the past seven lean years of European stagnation, there have grown up technical problems in their complexity and miasma in their very atmosphere. And the coming efforts can bear fruit only if the governments can push through the technical problems to think big about what Jean Monnet, the chief architect of European unity, calls, "a new sense of common purpose."

The most immediate of the technical problems — as a brilliant paper, prepared by Robert Triffin of Yale and published last week by Monnet's European Action Committee makes plain — has to do with money.

Heavy borrowing by the United States and Britain in Europe has strained international credit resources and driven interest rates to record highs.

It is generally expected that there will be another international currency crisis in the next two months. There is some fear that the agreement caused by high interest rates could lead to a worldwide depression.

To meet these money problems there have been advanced over the years a large number of highly technical proposals.

There are the proposals for Special Drawing Rights, or SDRs, on the International Monetary Fund, to increase world liquidity, for "crawling peg" or "widening bands" to put some give in currency exchange rates.

For Multilateral currency revaluation to stop the flight to the German mark, and even for a European monetary fund with a single European currency.

But the way out of the money woods, as Professor Triffin makes clear, lies in even wider economic cooperation. And the trick is to move from the various technical proposals now on the table to a general harmonization of economic policies among all the Atlantic countries.

A similar pattern is evident in the matter of defence. The coming arms control talks between the United States and Russia should result in a freezing of the balance of terror — a kind of moratorium on nuclear warfare by the Big Two.

It also seems fairly clear that before too long the United States will begin to scale down its troops on the continent. Thus Western Europe could become highly exposed to conventional forces on the Communist side.

Preventions of this danger have yielded a crop of technical proposals for strengthening Western Europe's defences.

Among other things, there are projects for pooling British and French nuclear forces in what could become a deterrent controlled by all Western Europe for developing and making available to the Europeans special low-yield, tactical nuclear weapons, and for beefing up Europe's conventional forces.

But the resolution of Europe's defence problems has to go way beyond these technicalities. The requirement — especially with France not participating in the NATO decision-making — is for a new way to sort out defence burdens and benefits. That means a kind of European defence organization within NATO.

Then there is the even more intricate maze of agriculture. At present the Common Market countries pay their farmers high subsidies which are financed by levies on foodstuffs imported from outside the member countries. But already the high subsidies are combining with technological advances to yield big surpluses of grains and dairy products which are increasingly costly to store and increasingly disruptive to such traditional agricultural exporters as the United States, Canada, and Australia.

The entry of Britain, a major food importer, under such conditions, would lead to a big rise in the British food bill, a further strain on the pound, and more disruption of agricultural trade.

Technical schemes for meeting these problems have been advanced by virtually every member of the Common Market. They range from making the present system definitive, which the French favor, to a restructuring of European farming, which the Dutch favor.

But even the Dutch proposals are too narrow. Unless there is coordination of basic subsidy policy between Western Europe and the major exporters, then European and indeed Western cohesion could come apart on pork and turkeys.

Given these difficulties, it may well be that the present governments of Western Europe will lack the force to battle their way through the technical problems ahead. A Europe that continues to drift aimlessly is probably the surest bet for years to come. But it is at least possible that steady plugging away at the problems will foster "a new sense of common purpose." There is, in other words, a hope for Europe after de Gaulle.

Incinerator Ban Would Add to Costs

Garbage Mounting Worry

In a recurring nightmare a City Hall friend of mine sees a fair city with proud towers, spacious squares and waving banners. And circling it is a belt of garbage which slowly encroaches on the perimeter.

Inexorably the garbage moves into the city streets and begins to mount. Finally, it inundates the metropolis and, at the end, all that can be seen is a garbage sea with waves of waste paper and thousands of gulls circling overhead.

It's a fanciful concept but has in it the seeds of truth. We are, one is tempted to think, slowly drowning in our own garbage.

In the recent Clean-Up Week in Victoria 2,662 cubic yards of garbage were picked up and this was not the ordinary rubbish normally collected weekly. This was extra waste collected only once a year.

The interesting thing about it, if garbage can be interesting, is that last year, when extra waste pick-up was re-instituted for the first time in a decade, only 1,400 tons were picked up.

The fact is that regular garbage collection is growing at the rate of more than eight per cent a year and has been a real problem to Victoria, and other cities, for years. Last year 27,665 tons of the stuff were picked up on Victoria streets as compared to 25,300 tons the year before.

It cost the city $317,000 to pick it up and $30,000 more for the operation of the garbage wharf. Hauling it away cost another $61,000.

With manufacturers sealing their products in elaborate packages (presumably in an effort to keep the consumer out of them) garbage is getting lighter.

Twenty years ago a cubic yard weighed about 550 pounds. Now it weighs 200 pounds — but there is so much more of it.

This is not the place to go

into the various means of disposal which have been used and suggested but the sanitary landfill method in use at the Hartland Road dump where most of the area garbage ends up, seems to be working satisfactorily — as long as the land holds out. All of which gets around to the council proposal to end incineration in backyards in the city.

If this is put into effect, at an estimated cost of $40,000 a year, it will mean all the paper and flammable material now burned outdoors will be added to the total load to be collected and disposed of.

No one can fault the chief proponent of the ban, Ald. Clyde Savage, on his desire to end air pollution but I can't convince myself that the smoke from outdoor incinerators is that much of a problem.

It may be that I have never lived next to a person who allowed garbage to smoulder in his incinerator but generally, I think, incinerators are used for paper and light material which would otherwise add to the bulk in garbage cans. And, of course, if you ban outdoor incineration what about barbecue stands and pits?

Prejudice Taught in Subtle Ways

Books Unfair to Indians

A constant complaint of our native Indians is that the public education system is weighed heavily against their children and that textbooks actually portray the Indian in degrading terms.

There is much justification for the former charge. Indian youngsters dropped suddenly into the white man's Grade One are overwhelmed in a strange world. The classic pattern has been defeat for the Indian.

The second charge regarding textbooks has been repeated many times, often with wild accusations.

There's a gulf of misunderstanding between the races, of course. When a native Indian talks about teaching "the value of being an Indian," the average white is apt to wonder what he's talking about.

Spokesmen for the Indians have lately been demanding the removal of textbook material which "ignores, defames or disparages" the heritage of Canada's 237,000 Indians.

Much progress has been made in this direction but undeniably prejudice is taught to children in a variety of subtle ways.

Some of these ways are pointed out in a study passed on to me by Mrs. Diana Recalma, wife of the chief of the Qualicum Indian band. Many of the examples are from American textbooks but the themes are worth quoting:

Textbooks, says the study, perpetuate these ideas:

"The idea that the Indian is not now a part of society; the idea that, even if there were atrocities, it all went for a good cause; the idea that Indians are basically inferior and not very bright; the idea that the white man was usually in the right and the Indian a savage opposing progress; the idea that the Indian is indebted to the white man for such gifts as Christianity; the idea that the condition of the times applied only to Indians."

The study adds: "What is not said is also important. Where, for example, in his school books can an Indian child see himself as a person?"

"Where can he see pictures of his heroes, someone other than George Custer? Where can he read that his ancestors were loving, sincere, capable human beings?"

Last week I finally carried out a long-standing resolution. I browsed through the entire prescribed list of B.C. readers and social studies texts, and had a look at the school library books dealing with Indians.

In brief, I found plenty of evidence in older books to back up what the Indians have been saying, but very little in the newer books. I read through the eyes of a white, and perhaps some of our ultra-sensitive Indians could have found much more to take issue with.

The 1946 history, Canada — A Nation, is no longer a prescribed text. It is still available, however, and gives the familiar stereotype of Iroquois cruelty, filth and improvidence:

"For 20 years the Jesuits struggled valiantly among the Hurons, only to have their hopes dashed on the rocks of Iroquois enmity and savagery."

In elementary readers there are a few poems and stories about the Indian, but he's a rather colorless figure. The first Indian story is a one-act playlet set on the West Coast, and read in Grade 3.

There are several stories and legends in the main Grade 4 reader. To my eyes they were completely bland. The Grade 5 reader, Under Canadian Skies, contains a story about Jacques Cartier in which the white man comes off second-best; he's afraid of Indians who only want to trade.

The same reader contains the story of Almighty Voice, the Saskatchewan Indian who in 1895 shot a cow and several Mounties before being done in.

Moral: "Almighty Voice was not really a bad Indian. He just wanted his own way and didn't want to obey laws." And here's that old standby, William Henry Drummond, telling the story of Mandiwik Vrochewas:

"... Till the murderous eyeballs glistened, and the tomahawk leaped out. 'And the banks of the green St. Lawrence echoed the murderous shout.'"

Personally I can't object to stories about Indians killing white men. They did kill whites, and whites killed Indians. Why pretend it didn't happen?

Trouble is, the Indians never get their side of the story properly told. Take this bit of poison from the Grade 6 reader, Broad Horizons, in which Jacques Cartier reappears, this time "persuading" some Indians to return with him from Quebec to France.

The Indian chief says: "Ah, very good! Very good. Yes, I will send my sons to visit the Great King. I will trust my white friends."

Those being the final words of the play, the Grade 6 kids don't learn that Cartier actually kidnapped a group of Indians who later died of various diseases.

A look at more textbooks next week.

'... They Even Criticized Me'

CHICAGO (AP) — "Gentlemen, get the thing straight, once and for all—the policeman isn't there to create disorder, the policeman is there to preserve order," Mayor Daley told a news conference after the 1969 Democratic National Convention.

The statement by Chicago Mayor Richard Daley is contained in a recently-published book called "Quotations from Mayor Daley," a collection of published Daley comments.

Some examples:

"They have vilified me, they have crucified me, yes, they even criticized me."

"That is unreasonable reasoning."

"Together we must rise to ever higher and higher plateaus."

"Ladies and Gentlemen of the League of Women Voters."

The 125-page paperback is published by Pocket Books of New York and was compiled by Peter Yenne.

Mayor Daley said Saturday he knew nothing about the book, adding that he was probably misquoted.

One Killed, Two Hurt In Running of Bulls

PAMPLONA, Spain (UPI) — A fighting bull called "The Quiet One" fatally gored one Spaniard and critically wounded two others Saturday during Pamplona's annual "Running of the Bulls."

The three men were among hundreds of other Spaniards and tourists running in front of six bulls through a boarded up street to the bullring, where all of the bulls were later fought and killed.

The morning running of the bulls and the afternoon bullfight were the sixth of the city's annual Festival of San Fermín, the patron saint of Pamplona. The festival provided the background for Hemingway's novel, "The Sun Also Rises," which made the running of the bulls here known throughout the world and later a major tourist attraction.

During the running Saturday, one of the bulls from the ranch of Salvador Guardiola broke away from the others. He was not immediately identified.

Both were reported in critical condition in a Pamplona hospital.

The death was the first in the running of the bulls since 1947.

The killer bull was the fifth to be fought in the afternoon bullfight. His name posted above the gate was Repetado, which means "The Quiet One" or "The One In Repose" in English. When he charged into the ring to meet matador Paco Ceballos, the capacity crowd shouted, "Assassin! Assassin!"

Spectators told police the bull used his right horn in each of the goings.

Spectators waving their shirts from behind the barricade distracted the bull's attention from the men gored in the street, and the bull trotted away to the bullring through a street cleared of runners.

Police identified the dead man as Hilario Pardo, 40, a bachelor who resided near Pamplona. One of the injured was Angel Zamora Irabel, 34, but the other was not immediately identified.

'One of B.C.'s Most Bizarre Murder Cases'

RCMP Has Body, Suspect

VANCOUVER (CP) — Police are attempting to solve a murder case that an RCMP spokesman described as one of the most bizarre and unbelievable ever recorded in British Columbia.

Police said Saturday that a suspect, a former mental patient, was arrested Friday night near Prince George, following the discovery earlier Friday of a badly-decomposed body in a shallow grave near Hope.

The suspect, armed and holding a youth as hostage, surrendered without a struggle when RCMP closed in on the hostage's car on the John Hart Highway.

The hostage, 19-year-old Steve Thorlakson of suburban Surrey, was rescued unharmed.

Positive identification has not been made of the body found at Hope. Police believe he is a Vancouver area man, missing since May, and that he was murdered in Vancouver.

The Mounties got their break in the case when they interviewed a young man Thursday night in Dawson Creek. He said he was one of two hitchhikers picked up Thursday by Thorlakson. An all-points bulletin then was put out for the arrest of the former mental patient, the second hitchhiker.

He was described as armed and extremely dangerous. He had a .38-calibre automatic pistol when arrested but made no attempt to use it. Police said Saturday the man is a prime murder suspect. He was charged in Prince George with armed robbery and remanded 30 days for psychiatric examination.

Meanwhile, information from the first hitchhiker led police to search for the buried body on the Hope-Princeton highway. The grave was located in dense brush near a logging road leading off the highway, about seven miles east of Hope.

The body, that of a male, had been wrapped in plastic and covered with quicklime. It was buried to a depth of about two feet and was badly decomposed.

Anti-Theft Plea Worth $20,000 To Some Brain

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Wanting: A foolproof, low-cost gadget to install in automobiles which will prevent operation or movement by thieves, yet require little or no active effort on the part of the owner. Reward: $20,000.

The search to find such a device was announced Saturday by the Popular Science Monthly and the Allstate Insurance companies. They are offering the prize money to anyone who can invent such a gadget.

CAR STOLEN

"Almost 600,000 cars were stolen last year and it is estimated that nearly 1,000,000 cars will be illegally taken in the U.S. during 1969," said William Wilkins, a spokesman for Allstate.

"The FBI calls car thefts the costliest crime involving property today... and we hope our effort to find such a device will prove successful." If such a device is found it will be made available to all car manufacturers, Wilkins said.

To be eligible for the cash reward, the developer must submit a working model to the Popular Science Monthly in New York City prior to Dec. 31.

Note: Devices based on new concepts or those which can overcome drawbacks on existing key or combination lock systems are sought. However, no device will be considered which "constitute a safety hazard to owners."

International Fight Flares in Ontario

CRYSTAL BEACH, Ont. (UPI) — Police arrested 32 persons early Saturday for what they described as gang warfare between Canadian and American youths.

The fighting occurred in the pre-dawn hours about 10 miles from the international Peace Bridge in this resort village across the border from Buffalo, N.Y.

Police said several persons were hurt in a barrage of rock and bottle throwing and fist fighting, but none seriously.

More arrests could be expected as the investigation continued, authorities said.

South Seas Far? Try Gulf Islands

B.C. Government Ferries schedules to the Gulf Islands offer exciting adventures for island hopping vacationists and excursionists.

We found a grand vacation area last weekend when we took to the Gulf Islands and ended up at the provincial government marine park on Galiano Island.

Less than a month ago, I was island hopping in the South Sea Islands from Tahiti (see Islander story today on pages 4 and 5) and this gave me the urge to visit some of our own Gulf Islands.

Substitute palms for the fir, bread fruit for the alders, bamboo for the arbutus and hibiscus for the dogwoods and there really isn't much difference between our Gulf Islands and the South Seas islands.

Both Beautiful

Both are beautiful, almost beyond description. We have more islands in a confined area. In the South Seas the islands are miles apart. In our Gulf of Georgia you can almost throw stones between them. The islands themselves provide the sheltered waters that the coral reefs provide in the South Seas. On hot summer days our weather is as nice as Tahitian sunshine, only they have it the year-round.

Narrow your eyes and dream a little and you can imagine yourself cruising in the exotic South Seas. Big difference is that here you can do it for a $2 excursion ticket.

We packed our travel wagon with grub, bathing suits, black Labrador Little Joe and Siamese cat Chow Chow and rushed for the 9:20 a.m. Inter-Island Ferry Mayne Queen from Swartz Bay, arriving at the terminal with just five minutes to spare.

Initial Look

Even then we hadn't quite made up our minds as to destination, but we chose Galiano Island because we had never toured that island and we wanted to have a look at the Montague Harbor marine park, with its 31 camping units and 25 picnic tables, shell beaches, mooring facilities, ideal warm water swimming and plenty of fun areas.

These ferry schedules really offer a bag full of surprise trips.

You can take the full Gulf Island excursion as a foot passenger, leaving Swartz Bay at 9:20 a.m. or 2:20 p.m., calling at Otter Bay on North Pender, Galiano's Montague Harbor, Village Bay on Mayne Island, Saturna Island, back to North Pender and Swartz Bay for a four-hour cruise. Take along a lunch by all means, but you can buy coffee, sandwiches and ice cream on board.

On Next One

That cruise costs you $2. You can also break the trip up and stop at one of the islands and pick up the ferry on the next trip. For instance you could get off at Pender Island at 10 a.m. and pick up the next ferry at 3 p.m. and complete the island tour, or pick up the ferry on its return run at 6:15 p.m. You could do the same for any of the other Gulf Islands.

To make it more interesting take along your car and drive around the islands, exploring them one at a time, like we plan to do. A car costs $2.50 each trip, $5 for the round trip.

For more island hopping

Montague Harbor, 4th of July when we chugged along under these yachts in our 12-foot aluminum, not much bigger than most of their dinghies, but we were enjoying the same fun as those rich Americans.

We even ventured into Active Pass and fished alongside the big yachts... caught as many fish as they did, too... a ling cod.

That Active Pass, between Galiano and Mayne Islands, is a busy place. You have to see it to believe it. In the short time we were there four ferries and a freighter went through it sending up a wash to frighten even a boater in a sizeable craft. It really isn't safe for small boats.

Speedy cruisers busily plied through the pass every few minutes and a whole flotilla of moochers spanned the pass, causing considerable navigation difficulties for the big boats.

A Quick Trip

We landed at Montague Harbor on the ferry at 10:45 a.m. Friday. After finding a campsite... and there were a number vacant, we headed for a quick trip to the beach before lunch. Tide was out and the magnificent shell beach and the shallow sandstone reef drew us like a magnet. Along the reef there were patches of sandy beach and clams squirmed seemingly everywhere.

We hadn't counted on this and had left the shovel at the car. A couple of clam shells acted as shovels and it was only a matter of minutes before we had enough fat little neck clams for a feed.

Then we went looking for oysters. There were plenty of empties along the reef, but the good patches close to the park have been pretty well worked over. We strolled and strolled until we got off the beaten track and had to crash our way back through the bushes along the power line to complete a circle of the park. Here we found a wild blackberry patch that had been undiscovered by campers. We collected another feed.

Cod, Berries

We like this living off the land and have been doing quite a bit of it lately. On this trip we ate clams, ling cod and berries.

At Sooke we collected 15 different desert meals of salmonberries last month, but two or three meals of cranberries, clams and all the salmon we could eat.

You could have a fine holiday without leaving Montague Harbor park, but there is plenty to see on the island and quite a bit of gravel road to travel. The island is 16 miles long and two miles wide, possessing more shoreline in relation to land area than any other of the Gulf Islands.

At the northern end of the island is Purlier Pass (between Galiano and Valdes), well known as The Gap, and there are lighthouses at both Race and Virago Points.

Rock Plants

Unusual characteristic of lovely southern Galiano is its almost perpendicular bluffs which afford a spectacular view of Active Pass. Covered with rock plants and colorful wild flowers, the bluffs are dominated by the oldest and largest trees on the island.

Take a drive along Active Pass Road for a wonderful view of the Pass and then turn off onto the Bluff Drive for a uphill, sometimes rough, drive to The Bluffs.

Park, which is really worthwhile.

This would make a good spot for a picnic where you can relax on the grass and watch the ferries and pleasure boats compete in that busy narrow ribbon of water, where the tide sometimes boils so much that it is dangerous for even the bigger pleasure boats.

Active Pass

Then you can drive to Surdies Bay, on Active Pass, where the interconnecting Mainland-Salt Spring ferry docks, and take in the gift shop, or if you have time, a snagsboard at Galiano Lodge, where you can also weigh-in your fish for the King Fisherman Contest. On Galiano you can also weigh your fish at the Montague Harbor Marina.

You can then drive the entire length of the island, from south to north, taking in the golf course, the red and gun club, Retreat Cove, Salishan Resort where you can camp in spring and fall, and rent cabins the year-round, Valhalla where you can camp and rent boats, Spanish Hills store, near where the Salt Spring Lands is building a boat ramp which will allow boaters to launch for Purlier Pass fishing when it is finished, and on to Purlier Pass Marina.

There is a pretty good concrete slab launching ramp at Montague Harbor Park, the only completed launching ramp we saw on the island. That is within easy boating distance of Active Pass, but a little too far for Purlier Pass unless you have fairly long-range cruising power.

The park itself has two campgrounds, one for boaters and one for regular campers, and a series of interesting marine trails. There was plenty of camping space when we visited it, but if you happen to arrive and the reguest you look into carrying your equipment to a boater's campsite. These seem to be little used, but you can't drive right to them.

Not in Tahiti

A sad thing we noted on Galiano... and we have found the same situation on other Gulf Islands we have visited. Pretty well the whole island is for sale. Real estate slushes and subdividers are in there with a vengeance, spoiling everything, and selling at fantastic prices.

That is something you won't find in Tahiti. Speculators can't buy property. The Tahitians own it all and the only way you can get property is through the Tahitian government... and then your plans have to be beneficial to and compatible with the Tahitian way of life. Much the same

U.S., Reds Exchange Scientists

SEATTLE (AP) — While U.S. radar ships tracked the movements of Russian warships approaching Cuba Friday, Soviet and American research vessels met off the Washington coast to exchange scientists for a co-operative study of fish populations.

Under an agreement made in Moscow last October, scientists from the two nations are studying the Hake populations in coastal waters from northern California to Vancouver Island. At present, most of the hake fishing off the U.S. West Coast is being done by Russians.

Donald Johnson, regional director of the U.S. Bureau of Commercial Fisheries, said the joint investigation will study what quantities of hake can be taken without depleting stocks.

Some hake has been processed in the U.S., but the fish is not widely used as a food. A fisheries official said the Russians, however, use hake for table consumption.

Lumber-Market
Slackness
Brings CutbackBy HARRY YOUNG Business Editor

Slackness in the lumber market has caused a number of B.C. sawmills to cut back on their production, until such time as the situation improves.

"We have slowed down production at our Ladysmith mill by working on two shifts," said Herb Doman, president of Douglas Industries.

The mill went on to a three-shift system earlier this year when lumber demand and prices were at their peak. The graveyard shift was eliminated about a month ago.

In addition the Ladysmith mill, which specializes in small logs, will be closed for a two-week period in August for holidays.

Doman said there was no use piling up an inventory at present because the cost of logs is out of line with the current selling price of lumber.

He expected an improvement in demand in early fall, but he said, "It largely depends on what happens to the housing program in the U.S."

The old saying that anyone can borrow money if he is willing to pay high enough to get it, is not at the moment strictly true.

Even the banks have very little lending money available at 10 per cent "for good-purpose use" to their better customers. One local banker said he was endeavoring to cut down on all loan requests where the end use did not appear essential.

'Prohibitive Levels'

"It is all part of the battle against inflation," he explained. "There are still a great number of people seeking loans even at what only recently would have appeared prohibitive levels."

"People want to borrow money now because they are not convinced that the inflation battle can be won," he added. "A loan today at 10 per cent not repayable for 10 or more years might be redeemable in such deflated dollars that the interest rate could be well worth while."

Until this psychosis changes the prospects of an easier money market are not too bright.

We would wish more Victoria businessmen would drive over the Malahat on a summer evening, or live for a while in the area northwest of the Victoria industrial zone, so that they might have a more realistic view of the district's smoke problem.

City Alderman Clyde Savage told council he was shocked the other day with what he had seen driving south into Victoria.

Unfortunately, Savage and most of the city aldermen live either in Oak Bay or in the easterly part of the city that is not downwind from the smokestacks.

Another problem is that although the smog is created in Victoria, the worst of the pollution is suffered by people living in Saanich and Esquimalt, who have no control whatsoever over the pollution factors.

Little Real Growth

Canada now is entering several quarters of little real growth and declining corporate profits, which will at least be comparable with the 1967 mini-recession, says the investment firm of Burns Bros. and Denton.

The period of slow growth reflects in large part government policies aimed at curbing inflation. Governments now appear willing to accept a higher level of unemployment and to flirt with recession in order to curb inflationary pressures.

Burns Bros. and Denton concludes on a more optimistic note: "Fortunately, the underlying forces of expansion in the Canadian economy during the 1970s are so strong that the impending recession (pause?) is not expected to be deep or prolonged."

LINE WAS MISSING

The 50-per-cent maximum estate tax rate comes into effect on all estates with taxable values of $350,000 following the passage of recent government amendments.

In a report on the new tax conditions under the Estate Duty Act this column Thursday quoted a number of popular misunderstandings that Canada Trust says exist.

Unfortunately, a line of type was dropped which included the new level at which the maximum tax applies. It went on to say that the old maximum level of taxation was not reached on estates of less than $1,500,000 of taxable values.

At least one eagle-eyed reader caught the omission and asked for a corrected version.

Inventories grow across B.C. as demand shrinks

Money, Energy Saved
By Alternate Billing

By HARRY YOUNG

Once a month most home-builders do a budget clean-up, writing out and mailing the cheques that will pay their utility bills.

For most people it is the same old routine. One for electricity; one for oil or other fuel; one for the telephone company; one for a department store and others for various retail outlets.

Some of them, like electricity and the telephone, vary comparatively little and usually to a seasonal pattern.

COST: 16 CENTS

Leaving out stationary and personal recouping for loss of time, each bill paid by cheque costs a minimum of 16 cents — 10 cents for the cheque and 6 cents for a stamp.

Why can't the process be streamlined?

Why doesn't B.C. Hydro and B.C. Telephone get together and agree to put out their bills on an alternate two-month period?

They do it in Seattle and some other U.S. cities and as the telephone and electrical accounts are relatively similar in amount in many cases little hardship is created even for those who live on tight budgets.

TWO FOR START

If only Hydro and the telephone company would do it for a start in B.C. everyone would be saving money, energy and patience.

B.C. Hydro is already taking a step in this direction. It is now reading its residential meters only every two months instead of every month, and is thus cutting its reading staff in half.

But B.C. Hydro is still billing every month with the "non-checked" month based on an estimated and recouped when the next actual reading is made.

So far so good, but B.C. Hydro customers still have to make a monthly payment, even though the authority itself is "guesstimating" what is owed.

To get the streamlining on the road, I would ask B.C. Hydro to make out its bills each January, March, May, July, September and November and B.C. Telephone in February, April, June, August, October and December.

If the order came from someone like the premier, I have no doubt B.C. Hydro would jump, and Mr. Bennett is one of the people in authority who knows what practical economy is all about.

Incidentally, the new credit card systems now being adopted by the various banks make it possible to consolidate some of the monthly accounts. They are worthy of investigation.

Late, In Error

Returns Still In Works

OTTAWA (CP) — About 700,000 personal income-tax returns for 1968 — about 8 per cent of the total 8,400,000 filed — remained in the national revenue mill.

The other 7,700,000 have been entered and processed, the overpayment cheques mailed out to taxpayers where necessary, a tax spokesman said Friday.

Most of the returns still being processed were sent in after the April 30 deadline — more arrive every day — or contain errors for omissions that the tax center's computer would not swallow, the spokesman said.

At last count June 30, the Ottawa data centre was processing 473,000 returns and another 253,000 were out in the 29 district offices where local tax officers were seeking more information.

Last year at the same time, after a later start, about 850,000 of a total 8,400,000 returns remained to be processed.

No Sign Yet of Break in Slump

Stock Volumes Still Dropping in July

By NICK FERRIS
Canadian Press Staff Writer

June spilled over into July this week — or so it must have seemed to Canadian stock market investors.

Markets began to plunge lower Monday after a six-day rally and continued to fall until some investors mustered together enough confidence Friday to at least temporarily interrupt the slide.

The rally came after a major setback in June which pushed markets to their lowest levels since last September.

There appears to be no sign of a sustained break in the slump and investors have shown their realization of this by staying out of the market.

Volume this week dwindled off, setting a record daily low for the year Friday.

The few times markets have shown any strength since the beginning of June can be attributed to the usual bargain hunting that accompanies a market slump.

With conditions that touched off the long June slide — tight money, high interest rates and increasing inflation — still in existence, investor confidence continues to erode.

But there is still some of that now well-tested confidence lurking in dark corners of Canadian stock exchanges.

Some observers have expressed hope, pointing out that a slump cannot last forever or — during signs of a rally — that markets may be "basing out" without a selling climax.

political situation in the Middle East again is near the exploding point.

And United States economy, which so much affects Canada, has been threatened with price and wage controls.

Comments to the effect that the slump was needed for various reasons and that it can be expected to continue until governments feel inflation has been beaten have not encouraged market investment.

While the slump has been less than profit-making for the average investor, brokers too have been feeling the effects.

Brokers make their money on commission for buying and selling stock for investors and were pleased when exchanges reported a record-high trading value for the first six months of this year.

But if the June-early July trend persists and volume continues to dry up, they can expect a sharp drop in earnings.

For the broker, heavy trading — either in a bull or bear market — is desired.

Statistically, an index at Toronto, industrials fell 7.57 to 174.97, western oils 20.51 to 28.42 and base metals 4.94 to 105.70. Golds rose 4.88 to 228.89.

Volume was 10,947,000 shares compared with 10,139,000 last week. Declines outnumbered advances 686 to 129.

On the Montreal and Canadian exchanges, the composite index gained .81 to 173.79. Combined volume was 3,820,000 shares compared with 3,310,000 last week. Declines outnumbered advances 288 to 78.

"WHY" BLOCK BROS. VICTORIA?

Could You Be a Successful Real Estate Salesman?

REQUIREMENTS—Over a period of years Block Bros. have reached definite conclusions as to the type of person most likely to succeed. A man aged 25 to 35 in good physical condition, married with a happy home life. A contributing member of his community. His education should be Grade 10 minimum and his living habits must be above reproach. Pleasant personality, neat appearance, and above all he should have an inner-urged desire to succeed and a willingness to work.

OPPORTUNITY—After obtaining a Real Estate Salesman's License you can expect to earn from $4 to $10,000 the first year. Your earnings should increase at a rate of 15% per year to the $15,000 level. Individual ability and skills will be the only limiting factor to higher earnings. When you consider the earnings potential and opportunities available to ambitious and yet not necessarily highly skilled or educated persons, Real Estate selling offers a financially rewarding career.

THE COURSE—In order to obtain a Real Estate License you must take a 10-week correspondence course. From the time you start the course until your final examination, will be approximately 3 1/2 months. Although Block Bros. provide complete classes to assist you in the course you will have to work extremely hard, having very little time for anything else. The cost of this course is approx. $100. It is essential that you have the complete support of your wife and family. Block Bros. managers feel it is absolutely necessary to meet the lady of the home to make sure there is a complete understanding of the costs, financial, time and effort.

For the Free Booklet "The Block Bros. Production" call or write Rose Branson, Block Bros., 1889 Blanshard, 386-2231.

PROSPECTIVE SALESMEN! Application for Real Estate Licensing Course must be in by July 15th, 1969.

Sandbox Concept Spreads

TORONTO (CP) — For $369 Canadian and two bags of the sand of your choice — the executive sandbox.

Furniture designer Hugh Spencer, 41, of Toronto calls his creation "a giggle" but claims it really is an outlet for bottled-up creativity.

So far, he has sold 30 models.

Spencer said Thursday he came up with the executive sandbox design after his wife said she wanted a coffee table with sand in the middle. He produced a 42-inch-square, 15-inch-high box made of plywood, that can be covered with teak, rosewood or walnut.

It has fluorescent lights under the black plastic ledge on which proud owners can sit to draw patterns in the sand with hand-made tools, or wiggle their toes.

He is offering the sandbox to U.S. consumers for $456.

Invasion's Goal To Free Army

SEATTLE (UPI) — In an announcement lacking D-Day secrecy, an antiwar group called Free the Army said Saturday it would invade nearby Ft. Lewis today to "liberate" the 40,000 soldiers stationed there.

"General" Stephanie Countz, mini-skirted leader of the invasion forces, said her troops, numbering about 40, were ready for either a land or water attack on the military base.

The group had announced the invasion earlier but refused at that time "for security reasons" to name the date.

When army officials first heard of the invasion plans by the small force, they spent a session leafing through military rules and regulations and then announced they "do not provide for invasions."

An army spokesman said the invasion would be rebuffed as gently or forcibly as the situation demanded.

In the earlier announcement, Miss Countz said the declaration of war was against "the Washington D.C. army and on the United States, a political arm of the D.C."

Her report on the planned attack used the letters "D.C." much as "V.C." are used to describe Viet Cong forces in Vietnam.

Voyager May Have Fallen Overboard

Hope Abandoned for Briton

By ANDREW TORCHIA

LONDON (AP) — Searchers closed the books Saturday on the "round-the-world" voyager Donald Crowhurst with the theory that he fell overboard. His wife clung to the belief that he died a hero trying to rescue another sailor at sea.

Crowhurst's 41-foot trimaran was found abandoned in the Atlantic Thursday when he was within 2,000 miles—two weeks' sailing—of completing a nine-month, 29,000-mile voyage that would have made him the second man to circumnavigate the globe alone without stopping.

THREE BOATS

In the past 12 days three other boats have been found drifting deserted in the same part of the Atlantic—an area 250 to 700 miles around the Azores—with no word of what happened to the men on them.

"The only sensible idea is that Crowhurst fell overboard without a safety line or life jacket," said a spokesman for the London Sunday Times, organizer of the race in which the 36-year-old electronics industrialist was taking part.

But Clare Crowhurst asserted at her west England home that her husband was too careful to have been on the deck of his boat Teignmouth Electron without safety equipment.

ANOTHER SAILOR

"I believe he was going to the assistance of another sailor in trouble and somehow got in trouble himself," she said.

Mrs. Crowhurst, whose four children are between six and 11 years old, added that the last radio message she received from her husband was on June 25: "Taking life easy. Looking forward to seeing you all soon."

"He was extremely alert after that long time at sea," she said. "The challenge of this voyage was vital to him. I have no regrets. I'm glad he had a chance to do it."

Dial Disturbed By Reporters

WASHINGTON (AP) — The "dial-a-disturbance" service at the Pentagon has changed its telephone number.

The service provides up-to-the-minute information on any civil disturbance in the United States. It was intended only for top Pentagon officials but after reporters discovered the number and ran it in stories, the service was flooded with 1,500 calls in 24 hours. Now "dial-a-disturbance" has an unlisted number.

Crowhurst's disappearance in apparently calm weather came as a tragic reminder of the tremendous odds against the nine men who entered the non-stop "round-the-world" competition announced in March 1968. Only one finished—Briton Robin Knox-Johnston, 29, who brought his 32-foot ketch Suhaili into Falmouth April 22 after 312 days at sea.

Frenchman Bernard Moitresier might have won, but eventually put in at Tahiti. Others were forced out by sickness or damage to their vessels.

Race organizers rejected suggestions that they had set the competitors too dangerous and difficult a goal.

IN ONE RACE

"After Sir Francis Chichester's 'round-the-world' sail in 1967, when he stopped in Australia en route, a number of people announced they were going to try it nonstop," a spokesman said. "We felt that by getting them all into one race we could organize safety arrangements and reduce the risks."

The Sunday Times said the $12,000 prize for the fastest voyage would go to Mrs. Crowhurst on the basis that her husband had, after 252 days, at sea, crossed the line of his outward route and thus sailed around the world.

The newspaper said it was also contributing $12,000 to a public fund for Mrs. Crowhurst.

FOOD SUPPLIES

Crowhurst's boat was found with equipment intact and adequate supplies of food and water, a situation recalling the 1971 Marie Celeste, which was found without her 12-man crew in the same part of the Atlantic.

The boats discovered in the area this month included an overturned 35-footer, a 60-foot yacht also bottomed up and the 20-foot Vagabond, in which Peter Wallin of Stockholm, Sweden, was sailing alone to Australia.

JIM TANG

ED DOROHAY, not too much over his playing weight, is holidaying in Victoria with his family. He reports that Spider Mauer, in the public relations field in Winnipeg for a brewery, and Reg Abbott, in the insurance business, are both making a success of their careers. . . . a young fellow who figures to be making headlines on these pages in about 15 years arrived in town last week. He made Bob and Mary Cougle parents, and the last available word was that he is to be called William Todd. . . . Uplands Golf Club is reported to have its course in superb condition and wearing Canadian pros will be in for a treat in the B.C. Open next month if the weather is good. . . . it is just a bit unexpected to learn, from an article in Time Magazine, that the average age of horse-racing fans in the U.S. is 32 years. Bill Veck, the former baseball showman who is now in charge at Suffolk Downs, is thinking of ways to keep that figure. . . . one of the more amazing statements of the year was the "If there's anything that can be over-stated it's pollution" made recently by Phil Gagliardi. The problem of pollution is so big that it is difficult, if not impossible, to overstate it. Health Minister Lofmark deserves the support of everyone in his effort to do something about it. . . . motor sports are drawing huge crowds almost everywhere these days, a fact noted with a droll comment by newscaster Barry Reusser. "They don't come out to see the crashes but if there were never any crashes they'd never come." . . . Peter Land, who played soccer with Victoria West and cricket with the Cowichan club during his previous stay, has returned to Vancouver Island and taken up residence at Maple Bay. It increased that community's population by three. . . . Peter, Heather and Joanne, the latter having arrived on the scene during the year the Lords spent in Lincolnshire. . . .

WAYNE HENDRY, one of the top fivepin bowlers here a few years back, has returned to Victoria to take over as manager of Gibson's Bowladrome. . . . Nick Gellmer has been selected as champion of the B.C. team being sent to the Canadian swimming and diving championships in Montreal Aug. 11-16. . . . and Lynn Bowler has been appointed by the B.C. Track and Field Association as manager of the women's teams which will compete in the B.C. vs. Washington meet on July 19 in Richmond, the B.C. vs. Prairie meet in Lebridge Aug. 16 and 17 and the Canadian championships here Aug. 20 and 31. . . . Bill Barbour, Gord Leichter and Skip Chapman have asked the Canadian Lacrosse Association for reinstatement, and it means that three more players who are needed have been lost to the Western Lacrosse Association. It looks now as if the Mann Cup is no more than a year away from again being the top event in lacrosse. . . . Maurice Barnes of Victoria, whose club affiliation is Cedar Hill, and Samuel Priestland of Nanaimo are Vancouver Island entrants in the Pacific Northwest Golf Association junior girls' championship, scheduled at Tacoma's Oakbrook Golf and Country Club, July 14-18. . . . there is a good report for hunters who travel to the Prairies each year for water-fowl shooting. Ducks Unlimited has reported that this has been the best breeding season for years in Western Canada. . . . Sports Illustrated a week ago concluded a three-issue series on the use of drugs in sports which should have been read by every athlete and official. One thought-provoking comment made by author Bill Gilbert was that " . . . only one major American sport has any drug regulations. That is horse racing." . . . Gord Gausson, one of the top gymnasts in Canada and coach of 1968 junior-champion Pick Johnson, has left the YMCA. Gausson wants to devote more time to gymnastics in his bid for a place on the 1972 Olympic team. . . .

DAVE McNALLY, the Baltimore left-hander who is 12-0 this season with the help of teammates, who have taken him off the hook seven times, owns one of the most amazing records in American League baseball play. In the 1960 season, McNally struck out 259 batters in 105 innings while compiling an 18-1 record which included five one-hitters. . . . I've seen no report on it but it appears as if Mike Rossmark, who played here two years ago in the Commonwealth golf matches and earlier this year again won the British amateur championship, has become a professional. At least the list of money-winners for the British Open which concluded Saturday lists a Michael Rossmark as winning $275 for rounds of 74, 72, 73 and 79. . . . whether Toronto-lawyer Alan Engleman, brought in to help out, can take any credit has to be a guess but Greg Flindley has just signed a contract with B.C. Lions which is said to be the best ever given a Canadian lineman in the Canadian Football League. . . . the popular Blue Owl golf tournament is scheduled this year for Gorge Vale, Sept. 12 and 13. . . . Ipswich Town, opponent for Victoria O'Keefe's in an international soccer game here on July 22, has a unique accomplishment. The team won the English championship in its first season in the first division and was back in the second division after the next season. . . . with the English team here will be Billy Baxter, a centre-half rated so highly that Ipswich refused a $250,000 offer from Southampton. . . . there have been several occasions in the major leagues when a home-run hitter was walked intentionally with the bases full but Washington's Frank Howard was paid an even-bigger compliment last Tuesday. Cleveland-manager Alvin Dark ordered a base on balls for the big fellow with no one on the bags and the Senators, leading, 5-2, in the fourth inning. And who can say it didn't work? The Indians finally triumphed, 6-5.

Price Cracks Record, Wins Speedway Feature

Bill Price broke the track main event before 2718 spectators at Western Speedway last night at the stock car races. Saturday and took the 30-lap Price's time of 20.903 seconds.

Quinton Mar Tops Pistol Marksmen

Quinton Mar sparked Pacific Command Rifle Association to the highest team score Saturday in the annual Victoria Police pistol championships which conclude today at the Thetis Lake Range.

Mar won both the .22 calibre slow (185) and rapid fire (195) events to help PCRA to a 1128 total. George Tord of PCRA was the time fire event to contribute 197.

Arthur Mason of Vancouver Police won the National Match Course event with 288, helping the team to the top police place of 1112.

Ashe, Koch In Net Final

WASHINGTON (AP)—Arthur Ashe Jr., up-ranked in the United States and Thomas Koch, Brazil's top player, won their way Saturday into the final of the $25,000 Washington Star International tennis tournament.

Ashe held off a second set surge by the tenniseer known 21 Shafel of Egypt to win 6-3, 6-4.

Koch, a tall left-hander with shoulder-length hair, downed Mike Belkin, Canada's top player, 6-2, 6-3.

Ashe and Koch meet today for the first prize of $5,000. Second place is worth $3,000.

Washington's first baseman Mike Epstein isn't really clobbering Bobby Murcer of the Yankees but it sure looks like it. Epstein is merely picking up a toss from pitcher Dick Bosman as Murcer ducks underneath in trying to beat out a bunt. New York won, 3-1.—(AP)

Perry, Rees Set Pace As Twins Whip Pilots

Approaching the All-Star break, it would appear that Baltimore Orioles will be tough to knock out of the Eastern Division lead in the American League, and now Minnesota Twins are giving indication that they may shortly be in the same position in the West.

Twins failed to boost their three-and-one-half-game margin over runner-up Oakland Athletics with both teams winning Saturday, but the 11-1 rout of Seattle Pilots was the 12th victory in 14 games for the spurring Twins.

RIGGEST SPREAD

The teams have been involved in a first place struggle since late May but the current spread is the longest in that period.

The combination of powerful, plentiful hitting and effective pitching which have been the trademark of Twins through the season were again together against Pilots.

Jim Perry allowed one run in the first inning, and then blanked Seattle the rest of the way to finish with a five-hitter and bring his record to 8-4.

Tony Oliva extended his hitting streak to 11 games with three singles and scored three runs while lifting his batting average to .336, but Rich Reese supplied most of the muscle, driving in four runs with a single, double, and home run in the 14th inning attack.

Oakland held its ground behind the three-hit pitching of Jim "Catfish" Hunter, who struck out 10 batters on the way to a 4-2 victory over California Angels.

It was the third straight victory for Athletics.

ORIOLES PAD LEAD

Orioles extended their lead over Boston and Detroit Tigers to 12½ games by blanking the Red Sox, 4-0, on Mike Cuellar's three-hitter. Held hitless by Mike Nagy for three innings, Orioles exploded for five straight hits and all their runs in the fourth inning. Brooks Robinson started the rally with his 16th home run.

Detroit took over second place from Boston by three percentage points by pounding out 11 runs in the first two innings on the way to a 15-3 rout of Cleveland Indians.

Mickey Lolich gained the win with a six-hitter to bring his record to 12-2.

Don Wert had four hits including two home runs and Jim Price drove in five runs with a homer and two sacrifice flies as Detroit managed 16 hits.

ROOKIE BLANKS CHICAGO

Rookie Jim Rooker gained his first victory for Kansas City with a three-hit shutout over Chicago White Sox in a 7-0 Royals' win in 55-degree heat and New York Yankees stopped Washington Senators, 3-1, in other action.

In the National League, Chicago Cubs gained a half game in the Eastern Division by downing Philadelphia Phillies, 7-4. Ferguson Jenkins gained his 12th victory with relief help from Phil Regan.

PASSED BORNHAY

Ernie Banks drove in a run to pass Rogers Hornsby and move into fourth place among National League players with 153 career runs behind him.

The Cub first baseman is now 11th on the all-time list. Mel Ott holds the record of 180.

Willie Smith made up for a first-inning error with a three-run homer in the third inning. Smith had dropped the ball with two out in the first in a collision with centre-fielder Jim Qualls enabling Phillies to score two unearned runs.

CARDIS CONTINUE STREAK

St. Louis Cardinals continued their July streak, downing Pittsburgh Pirates, 6-3, to reach the break-even mark for the first time this season. It was the eighth victory in nine games for Cardinals, who have won four in a row.

In the Western Division, Los

View Royal, Sooke Win Openers

View Royal and Sooke won their only games in the first day of the two-day Lower Vancouver Island bantam boys' softball tournament Saturday at Helmeck Park. The two Esquimalt teams remained "alive" in the double-elimination tourney with 1-1 records while Cordova Bay was eliminated.

View Royal downed Esquimalt "A", 3-1, as Ron Wilson drove in a pair of runs with a double and Sooke defeated Esquimalt "B", 8-2, scoring three runs in the fifth inning and four more in the sixth.

Cordova Bay absorbed a 14-3 loss from Esquimalt "A" and a 11-1 defeat from Esquimalt "B".

The two Esquimalt teams play in a losers' round game at 10 a.m. today at Helmeck Park, followed by a game between the two unbeaten teams, View Royal and Sooke, at 12 noon.

Other games will be played at 2:00, 4:00 and, if necessary, at 6 p.m.

View Royal All-Stars won and lost decisively Saturday in the Babe Ruth Lower Island baseball tournament at Reynolds Park.

Tournament-host Evening Optimists downed Victoria, 14-3, collecting 15 hits while Glen Campbell speeded five hits to drop the Victoria team into the losers' bracket of the double-elimination tournament. Victoria came back for a 14-1 win over Cosmopolitan "B", taking advantage of eight Cosmo errors while collecting 15 hits. Chuck Johnson stopped Cosmo on one hit.

Cosmopolitan "A" and Evening Optimists meet in the winners' bracket game at 1:30 p.m. today while Victoria takes on the loser at 6:00.

Vicettes Out Of Tourney

VANCOUVER—Molson Vicettes of Victoria were eliminated from the Canadian Northwest Women's Invitational Softball Tournament on Saturday when they were handed their second defeat, 9-2, by Vancouver Eldorados.

Beaten 7-5 by Vancouver Merchants Friday night, Vicettes stayed alive in the losers' bracket with a 3-4 victory over Brampton, Wash.

Other Saturday scores were: Yakima Webcats 7, Yakima Stealers 2; Portland 3, Calgary 2; Eugene 5, Eldorados 1; Webcats 8, Eugene 0.

Angeles Dodgers regained the lead with an extra-inning victory over San Francisco Giants while San Diego Padres snapped a five-game losing streak to stop Atlanta Braves, who drop a half-game behind Dodgers.

Los Angeles won 3-2 in the 14th inning when second-baseman

Don Mason fumbled Willie Davis' grounder to enable Ted Sizemore to score from third base with two out.

Padres defeated Atlanta, 7-5, when relief pitcher Bill McCool got pinch-hitter Tommy Aaron to pop out with the bases loaded in the ninth inning.

Adanacs Wallop Eastern Lakere goals of the game and led 7-2 at the end of the first period. They ran their lead to 12-3 in the second.

Other Coquitlam scorers were John Allen, Doug Walhamith, Alex Carry and Wayne Spooner, each with two. Kevin Parsons, Bill Bradley, Bob Reznassoff and Bernie Barneski.

For Peterborough, Coombes scored twice and Larry Ferguson, Jim Peterson, Ken Henderson and Davis got one each.

Peterborough's Pat Baker kicked out 48 shots in the Laker's goal while Merv Schweitzer blocked 30 for Coquitlam.

Western Lacrosse Association scoring leader Mike Gales led his club with three goals and four assists, bringing his season's total to 73 points.

Peterborough scoring ace John Davis—141 points in 22 Eastern Lacrosse Association games—was held to only one goal.

Lakers, the only eastern club to play in the west this year, takes on Vancouver Monday, Victoria Wednesday and New Westminster Thursday.

Adanacs scored the first six

Bob Sandwith of Victoria Y won the midge long jump (18 feet, 11½ inches) while Gail Gaudin of VTC won the 400-metre relay (45.7).

Juvenile winners included Myra Haskin of VTC in the 100 metres (12.7), Ken Armstrong of VTC in the 100 metres (11.0)

City Athletes Outstanding

"It's simply great — Victoria got seven titles today!" exclaimed the excited voice of Penny May from the Western Canada age class track and field championships Saturday at the University of Alberta in Edmonton.

"And we've still got one more day to go!"

Miss May, who holds the Canadian open records for the 100 and 200-metre hurdle events, picked up one of the seven victories registered by Victoria Track Club members.

She won the juvenile 200 hurdles in 28.4 seconds, two-tenths of a second off her national mark.

"It felt slow," she said. "I was hoping for a record today. I hope I beat Wendy Taylor's time."

Miss Taylor of Vancouver is co-holder of the 100 record of 14.4 seconds with Miss May but is competing in the junior division.

Langford Drywall handed leading Bate Construction its second straight loss in the Major Men's Softball League Saturday, edging the Builders, 3-2, at Central Park.

Bate's Barry Jackson suffered his first loss in nine decisions this season.

Behind 1-2, Langford tied it in the sixth inning when Stan Emerick, who had singled, scored on Steve Bishop's triple. Bishop, trying to stretch it into an inside-the-park home run, scored the winning run when Bate's catcher Jim Moody dropped the ball while trying to tag Bishop out.

Four games are scheduled to play at Central Park.

Nanaimo Trims All-Stars

Nanaimo's South End Mt. Beacon Legion defeated Victoria All-Stars, 5-3, Saturday in an exhibition juvenile soccer match at Royal Athletic Park before approximately 300 fans.

Both teams are preparing for the August visit of the Manchester School Boy All-Stars.

Roy Clarke opened the scoring, with just one minute gone, from a penalty and Nanaimo was never headed although Victoria came back with goals by Theo Vandenberg and Robert Gutierrez to tie the match after Brian Mayes scored the second Nanaimo goal.

All Thomson made it 3-2 at the half and boosted the margin to 4-2 midway through the second half before Vandenberg and Richard Fulk traded goals in the late stages.

Britain Celebrates Return of Title As Jacklin Tops International Field

LYTHAM, ST. ANNES, England (UPI) — England's Tony Jacklin, toughened by two years on the American golf circuit, returned the British Open title to his country for the first time in 18 years Saturday when he conquered New Zealand's Bob Charles by two strokes with a 72-hole score of 280.

The 25-year-old Jacklin survived a pressure-packed final round showdown with Charles with a 72 and became the first Englishman since Max Faulstich in 1951 to win Britain's most prized golf title.

Not since England's Roger Bannister became the first person to run the mile under four minutes in 1954 did an Englishman create as much excitement as Jacklin did on the final round.

With the partisan crowd screaming with delight every time he hit the ball, Jacklin battled Charles head-to-head down the final 18 holes and refused to buckle under the tremendous pressure.

In fact it was Charles who became the more unerved on the final holes as he failed to take advantage of bogeys by Jacklin on both the 15th and 17th holes.

TOOK PRESSURE OFF

Coming to the final hole Jacklin, who had a two-stroke lead over Charles and Ireland's Christy O'Connor after 54 holes, was still two strokes ahead of Charles. The left-handed New Zealander then took the pressure off Jacklin when he missed a 15-foot putt for a birdie on the final hole.

Jacklin touched off a deafening standing ovation when he dropped in for a par and with a broad grin on his face tossed his ball dramatically into the crowd.

Charles, who won the British Open here in 1963, also carded a 72 on the final round for a 282 total while Peter Thomson of Australia, a five-time winner of the event, and Roberto de Vicenzo of Argentina, the 1967 champion, were another stroke back at 283.

O'Connor, who slumped to a 74 was next at 284 followed by Americans Jack Nicklaus and Davis Love at 285. Nicklaus carded a 72 on the final round while Love had a 71.

Jacklin, who picked up a check for $10,000 for his victory, credited his two-year stint on the American PGA circuit for helping his game and enabling him to withstand the pressure.

Norman Grabs Golf Lead Trapp Climbs with Par 71

REGINA (CP) — Defending champion Moe Norman, Bill Wright of Edmonton and Vaughan Trapp of Victoria were the only golfers in the field of 138 to match par Saturday to make biggest gains in the Saskatchewan Open Golf tournament.

Norman's 71 put him in first place with 138, one stroke ahead of Wright.

Trapp moved into a share of 19th place, nine strokes behind Norman, at 147.

Final 18 holes of the competition, one of eight CPGA tour events, will be played today.

Seventy-three golfers survived Saturday's cut.

Former Toronto golfer Gary Slater, now playing out of the Bahamas, was alone in fifth place at 142 following a 74 while Stan Homenuik of Dauphin, Man., Bob Cox of Vancouver and amateur Rick Fraser of Regina were tied at 143. All had 73s following opening 71s.

Tiger-Cat Coach ...

Sazio Ltd. Saves Money for Ralph

HAMILTON (CP) — General manager Ralph Sazio of Hamilton Tiger-Cats of the Canadian Football League apparently won't have to go to the Supreme Court of Canada to defend his method of saving money on income tax.

A federal tax spokesman said his department will not launch an appeal case against an Exchequer Court decision last December that upheld Sazio's right to sell his services to the CFL team as a corporation instead of as an individual.

By incorporating himself as Ralph J. Sazio Ltd., he has taken advantage of low tax rates that apply to the first $35,000 of corporate earnings. The case went to court after the tax department ruled the $42,286 paid to Sazio for coaching the Tiger-Cats in 1965 and 1966 was personal income and not that of the company.

Mr. Justice A. A. Cattanach ruled then that any person rendering services may incorporate a company to render those services.

Corporations pay only 12 per cent on their first $35,000 of earnings, much less than individuals.

Sazio became head coach of the Tiger-Cats in 1965. He signed a three-year contract as coach in 1965, but in 1966 set up the company. Of the company's 1961 common shares, Sazio held 501, his wife 499, and a Burlington doctor one.

On April 15, 1966, Sazio resigned as head coach. But on the same day the football team hired his company to complete the unexpired term.

Sazio was hired by his own company in December, 1964, as general manager at a salary of $6,000 a year. The amount paid by the Tiger-Cats to Sazio for coaching services was $20,145 in 1965 and $22,145 in 1966.

Mr. Justice Cattanach found that during those two years, the company did more than just coach the football team. It managed Hamilton and Burlington office buildings and leased cars and furniture.

The judge ruled the company was "a properly constituted legal entity and that the company could legitimately carry on the objects for which it was incorporated."

Wednesday, July 23, 4:02-4:17 p.m., color shots of earth on last night before splashdown.

On Earth, Apollo Mission Is All Go

Grand Adventure Nears 'the Big Unknown'

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP)—Trained to a fine pitch, the Apollo 11 astronauts tapered off Saturday in rehearsals for the grand adventure—the July 20 landing on the moon.

After a brief Saturday session in a simulator, practising the critical phases of the landing and take-off from the lunar surface, Neil Armstrong, Michael Collins and Edwin (Buzz) Aldrin Jr. planned to spend today lounging around the astronaut quarters.

CLOSE WATCH

"We don't want to launch a tired crew," said Dr. Charles A. Berry, personal physician of the space men who has maintained a microscopic watch on their health throughout a long and exacting training program.

Concern for the physical condition of the men chosen for the first exploration of another celestial body has been so great that President Nixon cancelled plans to eat with them the night before Wednesday's launch, for fear they might pick up germs from him.

LANDING SPOT

Before calling it quits Saturday, Armstrong took a helicopter up and hovered over Patrick Air Force Base as the lunar module—LM—will hover in the search for a safe landing spot on the moon. Collins zipped across south Florida and back in a T-38 jet trainer.

"It's a difficult schedule these guys have gone through," Berry said, but they made it with flying colors. The physician pronounced them in fine shape, "really looking good."

The countdown on the massive Saturn 5 booster rocket and the spacecraft perched atop it ticked off flawlessly toward Wednesday's scheduled blastoff. Only a few minor problems had developed.

LUNAR VEHICLE

Test equipment was disconnected from the spacecraft and the lunar landing vehicle, preparatory to bringing them to a flight-ready condition.

Before an expected 1,000,000 visitors jamming the beaches, roadsides and waterways of this space centre—and a huge around-the-world audience on television—the Saturn is scheduled to go off the pad at 6:32 a.m. PDT, launching the astronauts on the glamorous mission for which the U.S. has prepared for eight years.

FIVE DAYS

Five days later, if all the new and dangerous manoeuvres of the landing mission are carried out successfully, the world will see on television Armstrong plant the first human footprint in the grey dust of the lunar surface.

Confidence was high that the Saturn, which has never failed an assignment, would come through again. The main peril of the flight will be encountered as Armstrong and Aldrin guide the fragile LM toward its touchdown on the crater-pocked surface of the moon, as they poke their way through the hostile environment, and when they blast off again for the return home.

Here, says Apollo launch director Rocco Petrone, the spacecraft encounter "the high risk, the big unknown." Officials of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration warned the public to be prepared for the possibility of failure on the initial moon landing attempt.

The Saturn will hurl the Apollo spacecraft into an earth orbit 115 miles high. At 9:16 a.m., the third rocket stage will propel the ship on its course toward the moon 230,000 miles away.

Hornet Ready For History

From Wire Reports

"The ship is ready!" declared Capt. Carl Sieberich as the USS Hornet cast off her lines Saturday in Pearl Harbor and sailed for a rendezvous with history.

For several days hundreds of men, working around the clock, prepared the 894-foot carrier for its mission as the man-on-the-moon recovery ship.

Elsewhere on the Apollo 11 scene:

● The Russians have been early arrivals for Wednesday's Apollo launch when part of the group of Soviet warships heading southward off the U.S. coast to Cuba steamed within 80 miles of the launch site. There was no indication whether the reds would stay.

The navy was shadowing the Russians, but civil defence officials were left to co-ordinate handling of the crowd at Cocoa Beach, Fla. Estimates are there will be 1,000,000 people coming into the area in 300,000 cars.

● Anatoly Dobrynin, Soviet ambassador to the U.S., has turned down an American invitation to watch the launching. The refusal keeps intact a record of neither Russia nor the

Colonist Classes

Swim Enthusiasm Grows

By MARGIE NAYSMITH

Here we are back in the swim again. It never ceases to amaze me that the minute we step back on the beach it seems as if we never have left The Daily Colonist Learn-to-Swim Classes.

A little boy of about nine or 10 years of age came to the table as we were putting up the microphone and loudspeaker, looked at me and said, "Gee, I feel that I was just here yesterday having a lesson, and it's been one whole year."

Well, now I know that I'm not the only one feeling this way.

NICE FEELING

It's rather a nice feeling, must say, and I'm glad to share it.

This week we concentrated on kicking and breathing for beginners and advanced swimmers. The advanced classes are working to build stamina.

Next week, beginners will be moving on to gliding, and kicking for those who have mastered the breathing.

If any still have trouble putting their faces in the water, they will have to go into smaller groups and still work on the breathing.

SOME WATER-SHAY

We try to get them to practise at home and at the beach. If they do, they usually do fairly well. Those who are really water-shay need to have the assurance of an instructor to get any practice done at all.

We are still getting people who do not have an adequate bag to hold their clothes. Two paper shopping bags, one inside the other, plus a plastic bag for wet suit, are just fine. A name and address on the bag is also a great help.

THE SWEATER

She could not remember what sweater she had had on. After some time, she condescended to try on the sweater that was in the bag and said, "Oh yes, I remember now; that was my sister's sweater."

If her name had been on the bag, she would have recognized it. This is the reason children will not claim lost socks or clothing. They do not remember what they look like.

I would rather the children did not bring watches to the classes. They leave them with us and forget to pick them up. I end up every year with three or four watches I cannot get anyone to claim.

I would like to remind that children using the bus will have to take the same bus back to town, unless they have a note from their parents to state otherwise. No exceptions will be made.

We All Love Mickey

The things people ask:

Q: There's a little car sticker around that reads, Mickey Mouse wears a Spire Agnew watch. Would you say this is an insult or a compliment?—B.L.B., Baltimore.

A: A compliment. Doesn't everybody love Mickey Mouse?

Q: I've read where LEJ draws one pension as former president and another as former senator. Isn't this illegal?—Jim Allen, Springfield, Ill.

A: No, sir. The Social Security Administration says you can draw as many government pensions as you can qualify for. If you meet the requirements, you are entitled to "all you can get."

Q: Is Robert Taylor's son as romantic as his father was?—Eleanor E., Hartford, Conn.

A: Terry Taylor is strictly a one-girl guy. He met Linda Basso, daughter of Pat Boone, in first grade. Terry gave Linda a ring he found in a box of Crackerjacks and they've been engaged ever since. They still see each other as frequently as permissible at the age of 13, going on 14.

Q: Didn't Al Capone die of VD at Palm Beach, Fla.? Or was he shot by one of his own gang? Also, what business did the gangster claim he was in?—E. Allen Russell, Columbia, Mo.

A: Capone died of paresis. Jan. 25, 1947, at his Palm Beach "fortress" in Miami Beach, Fla., not by the executioner's bullet. At the height of his power, he's said to have carried "business cards" reading, Alphonse Capone, Second-Hand Furniture Dealer.

Q: Our songs are pretty wild today, but wasn't there a Billie Holiday record some years ago that drove people to suicide, including the singer?—Joseph McManus, Woodside, N.Y.

A: Gloomy Sunday was the title of the song. The great Billie Holiday recorded it in 1941. Ballyhooed as The Sucide Song, about 115 suicides were attributed to it. Ironically, its Hungarian composer, Rezső Seress, himself committed suicide. But Billie didn't. She died in June of '58 after a long illness. She was under arrest on her death bed for possession of narcotics.

Q: I vividly remember a movie made years ago about the Joseph P. Kennedy family, when he was ambassador to Great Britain. Will it ever be shown again?—Mrs. Janice E. Juncoson, Pittsburgh.

A: From the letters I receive, you share that vivid memory with several other readers. But when I queried the family, I received the following: "Mrs. Kennedy, in reply to your question, said that no such movie was ever made." Signed, Miss Diane Winter, secretary to Mrs. Joseph P. Kennedy.

Blowing This Way

Retiring to Victoria is Warrant Officer Bill Ratcliffe who joined the RCAF in 1940 as a musician and has played with air force bands from coast to coast and served as bandmaster at No. 4 fighter wing in Baden Baden, Germany. He has been a member of the Training Command band in Winnipeg since returning to Canada. — (Canadian Forces)

Who Pays The Tab?

QUESNEL (CP)—Town council wants to know who pays the $384.38 tab for a joint chamber of commerce-town luncheon May 24 during Premier W. A. C. Bennett's visit. The chamber presented the bill to council after losing money on the $250-a-head luncheon which drew only about 130 persons of an expected 200 for the showing of The Good Life, a government-commissioned film on the province.

Green Acres Star Drops In

Joy of Living Albert's Goal

By DON GAIN

Talking to the Eddie Alberts over breakfast is a warm, magical, family sort of thing.

The male star of Green Acres looks just the same up close as he does on the screen. He thinks Victoria's flower baskets are a "stroke of real genius" and was glad to find out they aren't made of wax.

His wife, Maria Margarita Guadalupe Teresa Estella Bolado Castilla y O'Donnell, better known as Margo, is the same vivacious person who starred in Crime Without Passion and Winterest.

Their daughter Maria, almost 15, is a brown-eyed lawn who thinks Victoria is beautiful. Son Edward, 10, who is getting ready to enter UCLA, finds it, after travelling all over the world, "one of the most cared-for cities" he has ever seen.

Carol Munro, also at breakfast, didn't have any superlatives to offer because her home is in Vancouver. The Alberts have been visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Stewart, Vancouverites who summer on Saturna Island.

The Alberts are on a free-wheeling family vacation, and you can feel it. They've been doing a bit of cruising out of Saturna in the Vancouver-based 35-footer Ralvera, and caught a salmon off Active Pass.

They took the ferry over Friday for an impromptu visit—"when we were so close to Victoria we felt we had to see it"—and were too late to take the ferry back to Saturna Friday after they'd seen the Butchart Gardens. They checked into the Empress and Saturday morning had breakfast in the main dining room.

Conversation at breakfast was easy and warm. Eddie is a gutsy talker and can turn quickly to poetry which, of all his work, he finds "the most fun."

He quoted Homer to describe Vancouver Island—"A fair rich land begirt with water."

We discussed one of his favorite recitations—Stephen Vincent Benet's The Ballad of William Sycamore.

"It's hard to find poems that are just right," he said, "long enough and with enough interest for a wide audience." Had he thought of Walt Whitman's When Lilacs Last in the Dooryard Bloom'd?

Yes, he said, he'd thought of it. "I wish he'd do it," his wife said.

Eddie Albert has been in the television show Green Acres for five years. He thinks it's so popular because it appeals to many levels.

Six-year-old children like it, he said. The city person who has a desire to live in the country likes it, because he can go through the pitfalls in comfort.

"Then, some of it is high camp and other parts are beautifully satiric," he added.

His wife said she felt the television show gave out warmth and presented a clear-cut situation where the man was definitely a masculine type and the wife, played by Eva Gabor, was completely feminine.

The rest of the family left to go shopping, and the stage, screen and television actor, singer, nightclub entertainer and businessman settled down to talk about his crusade against the indiscriminate use of DDT.

"There aren't any more crabs off Los Angeles," he said. "DDT killed them off and it's killing off plankton, too, which is an original source for food supplies and the basis for 70 per cent of the oxygen in the air. The osprey and the bald eagle have all but disappeared."

The problem is no longer conservation, in his opinion, it is survival.

The actor is carrying this message to the public whenever he can, because he feels that is where the action against pollution has to come from.

He's quick to criticize the phony side of life, and believes today's youth has a keen eye for hypocrisy.

His philosophy of life is "to find moments of joy, not pleasure, necessarily, but true inner joy, and that's very difficult. It requires great mental discipline and one has to learn how to love and be loved. Both are very difficult in our society. I have sometimes found this joy but, find it or not, it's a good goal."

For his epitaph, he would like the simple phrase, "He made a difference."

"If you could make just the slightest difference before you check out, so that the world is just a speck less bitched up," he said, "then you have had a justification for being born."

Quick-High Deadly

LONDON (UPI)—London is supplemented with bar police have been alerted to watch for a new kind of drug—youths who inject themselves with beer and hard liquor, a Scotland Yard source said Saturday.

The source said a growing number of teenage drug addicts and hippies were taking alcohol directly into the bloodstream to give themselves a "quick extreme high."

The habit is so dangerous it is "like playing Russian roulette. Anyone doing this must have suicidal tendencies," he said. If beer is injected into the bloodstream, the carbonation can create bubbles leading to a fatal embolism, he said. Alcohol taken intravenously can cause a fatal malfunction of the bloodstream, and instant death if it

Nitrogen-Eater

ANAEMIC CORN (H.G. Brentwood) — The pale coloring in the leaves of your corn is due to a shortage of nitrogen, almost certainly caused by the massive quantity of sawdust you rotted into your vegetable plot last spring. Sawdust is most valuable for improving the texture of your soil, but it depletes the reserves of nitrogen in the soil temporarily while it is rotting down. Whenever sawdust or any other unrotted organic material is incorporated in the soil, it should always be accompanied by a dressing of high-nitrogen fertilizer.

In the meantime, you had better give your corn a feed of ammonium sulphate or ammonium nitrate fertilizer, and for quicker action, apply it in solution. Dissolve at the rate of half a cupful per gallon of water and apply with a watering can, giving each corn plant about a pint.

DYING PANSIES (K.S. Victoria) — Whenever one of your garden plants withers and dies from an unknown cause, it is always a good idea to pull it out and have a good look at the roots, preferably with a magnifying glass. You may find small grubs or maggots of one kind or another, or more likely, tiny root lice sucking the juices out of the roots.

A good treatment for these underground saboteurs is to water the roots thoroughly with diazinon, two tablespoonfuls per gallon. Give each plant a long, slow watering first with plain water, for the insecticide solution penetrates to the roots better in damp soil than in dry.

Drought or disease can cause the death of garden plants too, but in your case it seems unlikely that these troubles would single out just a few individual plants; the whole works would go, not just the odd plant here and there in the bed.

WEEDS IN A NEW LAWN (W.M. Victoria) — Ordinarily, it isn't a good idea to use 2,4-D weedkiller on a newly seeded lawn as it may have an injurious effect on the young grass. In your case, though, I would think your lawn is sufficiently well established. A pretty good rule of thumb is not to apply weedkiller until after the new lawn has had its fourth mowing.

Poached Egg Flower, the latter name because the blossom is yellow with white petal tips.

Limnanthes is a native of the Pacific coast and was discovered by the plant hunter David Douglas in 1833 during the same expedition in which he gave the world the Douglas fir. It is a low-growing annual, 6 to 8 inches tall, especially attractive when used as an edging for beds of taller flowers. Its sprightly yellow and white blossoms are very attractive to bees.

LAWN EDGE (O. McH. Duncan) — It is particularly difficult to keep grass neat and along a picket fence, for handclipping is a fiddly, exasperating job, snipping away at tufts of grass between the pickets. I think the only satisfactory treatment is to kill the grass and sterilize the soil for six inches on either side of the fence.

There are some excellent chemicals for this purpose: Laser's Calicide Vegetation Killer, Green Cross Vegetation Killer, Niagara Brand Clearit and the like. Or you can buy a tape called E-Z Edge; you stretch the tape under the fence and water it, whereupon the tape dissolves, killing all grass and weeds in a band four inches wide. The effect lasts up to three years.

ART BUCHWALD

Blowing the Whistle

WASHINGTON — The memoirs of Jackie Kennedy Onassis' secretary, Mary Gallagher, have titillated the world. Jackie's most secret thoughts and observations soon will appear in book form, after being serialized in the Ladies Home Journal.

I was as fascinated as anyone to read about Jackie's money problems, her attitude toward her White House guests, her penchant for clothes, and her method of handling gifts sent to her for her children.

I'll admit that at first I was critical of Jackie's behavior, but then the thought occurred to me what would happen if my wife had an upstairs secretary and the secretary wrote about all the things my wife did. It would go something like this:

"Annie Buchwald was quite lavish with money and never seemed to be able to make the books balance. Mr. Buchwald called me in one day and said that he was sick and tired of paying all of Mrs.

Buchwald's bills and he wanted a complete record of everything she spent.

"When I informed Annie of this, she became enraged and told me to tell the caterer that the next time we had a party, he was to use leftover wine from glasses to refill the glasses of people still drinking.

"I always worked upstairs in the bedroom, so no one knew that Annie had a secretary. Once, the people from Newsweek came to the house to interview Annie, and she made me hide in the broom closet.

"She wanted everyone to think she answered her own mail.

"Annie could be kind and at other times she could go into fits of rage. Once, I remember, the Salvation Army came to the door and she cleaned out the attic. But another time, when Mr. Buchwald lost $100 at poker, she wouldn't talk to him for two days.

"It was difficult to get work done because Annie was always on the phone, either talking to her friends or to her sister. I remember one hot day when we had to write a letter about a broken washing machine and she said, 'Let's not work today, it's so lovely outside.'

"Wonderful," I said. "What should we do?"

"Why don't you clean the swimming pool?"

"It was this kind of thoughtfulness which made me want to work for Annie forever.

"But money was always a problem. I once asked her for a raise and she said, 'Of course you need one. Ask my husband.'

I asked Mr. Buchwald and he said I should ask Annie.

"I went back to Annie and she became furious and said, 'If I give you a raise, it will have to come out of my own pocket.'

"I went back to Mr. Buchwald who said, 'I don't know what we'd do without you, Margie.' And I said, 'Does that mean I can have a raise?' and he said, 'Yes, but the next time we have a party, tell the caterer to mix ginger ale with the white wine. No one will know the difference."

"I think one of the things that got Mr. Buchwald particularly mad was Annie's extravagances when it came to redecorating the house. Annie never seemed to get it the way she wanted it.

"One time she told Mr. Buchwald she wanted new slipcovers and he got infuriated and said, 'That does it. From now on we're not going to serve any wine.'

"I don't know what happened to turn Annie against me. One day she called me up and accused me of telling a society editor that we weren't serving wine any more at our house. I protested it hadn't come from me, but she was in such a state she wouldn't believe me.

"So I decided to write these memoirs. It will be a good lesson to her, and it will make her think twice about hiring another personal secretary."

SYDNEY HARRIS

For All to Read

Quite often I receive letters from anxious parents who tell me that their high school or college children read this column with some respect and attention, and asking me if I would write about "the drug problem" among today's youth.

By this they mean, would I advise their children to stay away from drugs, and would I further recommend some reading that will persuade the youths to shun so dangerous and self-defeating a habit.

No, I will not give such advice, because it would be useless. I will, instead, recommend a book that both the parents and the youths should read, for two reasons — so that the parents can better understand what their children are looking for, and so that the children will understand that what they are (quite rightly) looking for cannot ultimately be found in drugs.

This book is The Master Game, by Dr. Robert S. de Ropp, and its author is a noted biochemist who also happens to be a sensitive humanist.

His sympathies are totally with the young people who are looking for pathways to a higher consciousness than their parents have found — but his training and experience have convinced him that drug-taking is a dead-end and not a pathway.

It is not a medical or moralistic book, but a metaphysical one; that is, it recognizes the inadequacy of everyday experience, and it sympathizes with the view that we must somehow learn to get beyond our ordinary selves if the human race is ever going to realize its full and creative potentialities.

But while drugs can — at great risk — give some a glimpse of these unrealized possibilities, Dr. de Ropp proves conclusively that no matter how often they are taken, drugs cannot change our level of being.

"Their continued use," he writes, "represents a form of spiritual burglary which carries its own penalty, an irreparable depletion of the substance needed for real inner work and a total loss of the individual's capacity to develop."

It is basically, "the level of being," that these young people want to change, and that is a good desire — to go beyond the paltry games of profit and glory and fame that have so seduced and deformed our society.

In this they are right, and their parents are wrong and blind; but the young people are wrong in making the easy assumption that the upward path can be found by popping a pill in your mouth, without first attaining self-realization, self-knowledge, self-mastery.

Parents, as much as their children, need to read The Master Game. It goes to the very nerve-core of the conflict between generations.

Ready for Moon Payoff

Bookies Draw Up Cheque

LONDON (UPI) — If Astronaut Neil Armstrong sets foot on the moon, major British bookmakers must ante up well over $34,000 to those who bet on a manned landing before 1970 or 1971.

The payoff could hit six figures because the bookies will not say just how much has been wagered. The biggest winner is a secret, however.

"We're ready to pay him off," a William Hill spokesman said this week. "In fact, we're about to draw up the cheque now."

"We are going to take a bad loss for an event of this kind," the bookmaker spokesman said. "The Americans just got going ahead by leaps and bounds and were too fast for us."

In 1964, David Threlfall of Creston, England, bet 10 pounds ($24) at 1,000-1 odds with the William Hill organization on a manned U.S. landing before 1971.

Threlfall, 27, a personnel officer, will be in London July 21. The moment Armstrong sets foot on the lunar surface, William Hill will stuff a cheque worth $24,000 in Threlfall's hand.

The Apollo 11 mission comes too late to capture one good-sized plum. In November, 1967, The People, a Sunday newspaper, offered $120,000 for the first man or men to either land on the moon or circle it and return to tell an exclusive story for the newspaper. The offer expired, unclaimed, in November, 1967.

Untouchables Remain India's Social Outcasts

BADSHAPUR, India (LAT)—Last Thursday was a proud day for Harnam Singh. His son went to work as a bus conductor. It is the first time anyone in the family ever has held a salaried job.

Light-skinned with closely cropped grey hair, 45-year-old Harnam Singh is a laborer, as were his father and grandfather. With his family, he lives in one room on a narrow lane on the outskirts of this farm village in the state of Haryana.

He works on the state roads near the village. When there is no work on the roads, he joins his wife working in the fields.

On a good day, they earn a total of six rupees — 84 cents. On this income, they are raising two sons and two daughters.

Harnam Singh is one of India's 65,000,000 Untouchables.

Thirty-year-old Jagdish

Prasad is a well-dressed clerk in the ministry of food and agriculture in New Delhi. He has a postgraduate degree in political science. Married with two children, he lives in an apartment in the capital.

Although many of the people he works with do not know it, Prasad also is an Untouchable.

For nearly 20 years, untouchability has been outlawed in India. But after a four-year nationwide investigation, a parliamentary commission on untouchability reported recently that the practice still is widespread. The commission's verdict came as no surprise.

The effort to root out untouchability here was not been notably successful. It still is a way of life throughout India, particularly in the villages.

Harnam Singh recalls that, as a boy, he and the other Untouchables were not allowed to attend classes in the school in his village.

"I was made to sit under a tree outside the school," he says. "Sometimes the teacher would appear under the tree and send the Untouchable boys to gather wood for his family or to graze his cattle."

Little effort was expended on teaching the Untouchables and the boys spent much of their time just playing under the tree. It took Harnam Singh 10 years to pass four grades before he gave up and became a casual laborer.

Things are somewhat better for his sons. By law, they can attend school with other boys in the village if their parents can afford the one rupee a day it costs.

Sham Lal, 26, passed his high school examination last month and obtained his job as a bus conductor with Haryana State Roadways.

"Sham Lal wanted to study in the college but I need him to supplement the family income," says Harnam Singh. His second son, Om Parkash, 14, now is attending the village high school.

"I will try to send him to college. With Sham Lal also earning, I can do it," says Harnam Singh.

His two daughters will not get an education because the family cannot afford it. They will remain mired in the social system which forces their mother to draw water from a well other than those used by higher or lower castes in the village.

One reason untouchability is so hard to stamp out in India is that many of the Untouchables themselves have a vested interest in it.

Here in Badshapur, a village of 8,000, there are 1,500 Untouchables. But these are divided into four separate castes below the upper castes.

The people of two of these untouchable castes look down on Harnam Singh. He himself refuses to associate with those of the fourth caste or drink water from the wells used by them.

For many years, the Untouchables had to draw their water from farm wells used by the caste. Two years ago, the government provided assistance to build separate wells for each caste in the village.

The government thus accommodates itself to the ancient system rather than struggle against it.

The complex structure of this deeply rooted social system makes change difficult. But some progress can be found.

The Untouchables are called today by the name Mahatma Gandhi gave them — Harijans, children of God.

Thanks in large part to years of preaching on their behalf by Gandhi, some of the Harijans have risen above their caste. Their number is few and difficult to count.

Like a light-skinned Negro in America trying to pass as white, once a Harijan escapes his social prison he frequently moves or changes his name to conceal his caste background.

Jagdish Prasad Duhan, the ministry clerk, is one of these. All of the families in the village in Uttar Pradesh where he was born are Untouchables. But his father owns more than 20 acres in the village and could afford a good education for his son.

When Prasad moved to New Delhi, he did not use the surname of Duhan which was common to all those in the village and which would have given away his caste.

While Prasad does not proclaim his caste to his fellow workers, he does not hide it if asked.

"What happens after I reveal my caste identity generally depends upon the attitudes and feelings of the people who know," he says.

"Some of them try to avoid me. Some do not like to take food with me. But I do not mind that. After all, I have not committed a sin if I am born in an Untouchable family."

VANCOUVER (CP)—Police are investigating the theft of 75 brass propellers worth about $1,800 and a one-ton truck used to haul them away. A spokesman said the thieves may have entered the warehouse owned by Osborne Propellers Ltd. by climbing a tree and crawling through a window.

Stamp Packet

The Royal Trust Co. has been informed by Queen Elizabeth's assistant private secretary, Sir Martin Charteris, that two envelopes carried on the June 14-15 transatlantic flight marking the 50th anniversary of the Aloock and Brown crossing, are becoming part of the royal stamp collection.

Details of the re-enactment flight sponsored by Royal Trust were given in this column April 20. On this flight 197 special covers were carried, the same number carried by Aloock and Brown.

Each bore the 1928 Newfoundland stamp picturing the historic Vickers Vimy in which the first crossing was made, together with the Canadian Aloock and Brown stamp issued June 13, the day before take-off. Each was postmarked in St. John's June 14, and the date stamped in Clifden, Ireland, the following morning.

Two of the letters were addressed to the Queen by the Governor General of Canada and by the Lieutenant Governor of Newfoundland.

The symbolic re-enactment flight was carried out by Eugene E. Lock of Mt. Pocono, Pa., president and chief pilot of Aviation Services International, and Thomas R. Lee, DFC, Montreal, general supervisor, public relations, The Royal Trust Co. and an ex-RAF pilot.

Canadians who use 6 cents stamps in quantity will be relieved to know that Plate No. 3 of the 1968 regular issue has been produced with 12 gauge perforations. Plates 1 and 2 of the hurriedly prepared orange definitive showing the Queen and CVA's new turbo train, were perf. 10. This resulted in many damaged stamps and frayed tempers.

Some other items recently added to the philatelic stock at Ottawa are the 6 cents Queen Elizabeth 1968, pre-cancelled; the 1 cent, 2 cent, 4 cent, and 5 cent Queen Elizabeth 1967 design, with 1 bar tagging; 6 cents, perf. 10 and 12 with 2 bars. The 3 cent denomination is not produced with new pattern.

Two Canadian commemoratives are being prepared for August 15. A six-cent stamp will mark the Canada Games being held at Halifax and Dartmouth, N.S., twin communities. The design is by Carleton McDermid; two-color lithography and one color engraving by the Canadian Bank Note Co. A 6 cents 20th Anniversary of Charlottetown, P.E.I. stamp designed by Lloyd Fritzsche, Fredericton, shows a map outline of the island. It is being printed by the British American Bank Note Co. in two-color lithography and one-color engraving.

British Indian Ocean Territory released its first commemorative stamp July 10: 2.25 rupees (3s/4d sterling) showing Aldabra Island, an oval shaped group about 8.23 miles enclosing a large shallow lagoon. One hundred and ten thousand were printed in panes of 25. Sixty thousand of the stamps have been sent to territory post offices.

A flora set of four stamps was released by Anguilla last month: - 10c. amaryllis; 15c. bougainvillea; 40c. hibiscus and 50c. cantleya orchid; multi-color lithography by Format Inter. Security Printers Ltd. in panes of 25 on no watermark paper and designs by John Lister staff.

Stamp Honors Brock

OTTAWA (CP)—Sir Isaac Brock, who died in 1812 in the Battle of Queenston Heights, will be commemorated by a postage stamp to be released in September.

The new issue will mark the 200th anniversary of the year of his birth on October 6, 1780 on the Island of Guernsey.

Vertical in format, measuring about one inch by 1½ inches, the stamp features a portrait of Gen. Brock and a stylized version of the 196-foot memorial column which stands on Queenston Heights. The words "200th Anniversary" and "200e Anniversaire" appear along the top border, and "Canada" along the bottom. "Sir Isaac Brock 1780-1812" appears under his portrait.

Two Blocks Set for James Bay

Highrises Designed For Elderly People

Two lodges designed and furnished particularly for old people, will be built in the James Bay area this year. The first will be a six-story, masonry-construction 167-bed home for the elderly, at 336 Simcoe, planned by Imperial Construction Ltd., Winnipeg.

Cost will be about $1,500,000 and it will be named Beacon Hill Lodge.

Second home for the elderly will house 165 and will be called Central Park Lodge after the construction firm, Central Park Lodges Ltd., Winnipeg, which has built 20 such homes across the country.

It will be on Niagara just off Monies and, with a summer start, the $1,700,000, seven-story residence should be ready by early 1970.

City officials say the Beacon Hill Lodge has cleared all committees, including the Advisory Planning Commission, and requires only council approval. The Central Park Lodge hasn't started on the committee circuit yet, but no problems are anticipated.

Both lodges will be equipped with non-slip floors and therapeutic whirlpool baths. They will have corridor rails for ease of passage.

Meals may be obtained in a central dining area or in rooms. Both lodges will provide hobby and recreational facilities and medical services will be available at any time.

Rooms will be furnished in a variety of styles, but all will be carpeted wall-to-wall and furnished with particular attention to the fact that their occupants will be old people, some of them infirm.

Ready Next Spring

Seven-story lodge shown in this artist's drawing, will provide luxury accommodation for 165 senior citizens. Construction will begin this summer on site on Niagara just off Monies. Cost will be $1,700,000. Completion of building is scheduled for spring of 1970. Victoria lodge will be 20th operated across country by Central Park Lodges of Canada, subsidiary of Trizec Corporation, Winnipeg. Building is being designed for elderly with corridor rails and non-slip floors. Therapeutic whirlpool bath will be available. Recreation and hobby opportunities will be offered. A second and similar lodge is to be built in same area, also this year.

The World in Brief

REYKJAVIK, Iceland (UPI)—An American military helicopter crashed 70 miles east of Reykjavik killing two of the three crewmen aboard.

A spokesman at Keflavik air base said a third crewman aboard the chopper escaped unhurt. The helicopter had been called to escort an American DC-3 which had lost one of its propellers while airborne.

TAIPEI, Formosa (Reuters)—The death toll in a coal mine disaster at Juifang, 30 miles northeast of Taipei, has risen to 28. The Central news agency said Thursday. The accident was caused by an explosion of pulverized coal which touched off a cave-in and fire.

VIENNA (AP)—Czechoslovak officials reported severe shortages of vital foodstuffs and other consumer and industrial goods through the country. The Czechoslovak news agency reported a great shortage of meat and eggs and Slovak trade ministry said "they are also shortages in industrial goods."

BERLIN (Reuters)—A team of West Berlin heart specialists has performed this city's first heart transplant. Reliable sources said the patient seemed to be doing well after the operation. Neither the recipient nor the donor was identified.

SEOUL (Reuters)—The former mayor of Pusan, South Korea's second largest city, was jailed for seven years for taking bribes. Kim Tai-man, 46, was found guilty of having received bribes from construction contractors in exchange for granting them city contracts.

Tanned Muscles at All Sooke Day

Burly Loggers Sensitive Up Close

By DON COLLINS

At a distance, they looked the part. Tanned muscles danced in the sunlight as axe blades bit deeply into the wood.

The men grunted and perspired, and against the backdrop of tall evergreens they demonstrated the very special skills that belong only to the giants of the forest. These were the loggers competing for various championships at All Sooke Day.

Up close, and on an individual basis, the picture was sometimes different. There was Earl Marcellus, a 25-year-old scholar who wants to be a university professor; an eastern lumberjack among western loggers.

Larry Downing, 24, of Castle Rock, Wash., soft-spoken and polite, stood up well under the confusion of an afternoon that saw both good and bad drop from on high for him.

His own mighty descent after climbing quickly to the top of a 100-foot pole helped win him the main event of the day. The other descent by sky-

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR Nicholson with world axe throwing champion, Hugh McKenzie, centre, and all-round champion, Brian Herlihy.

Earl Marcellus, the young scholar from Schaghticoke, N.Y., has already been chosen as one of the six-man U.S. team for the Australian meet. Earl is a third-generation logger (he uses the eastern term, lumberjack) and is a graduate forestry student at the University of Washington in Seattle.

He was first in log-bucking and second in the springboard chop in the novice division. "I have to practice for these things a lot because I am so small in comparison to some of these monsters," he said. He weighs 175 pounds and stands five-foot-ten-inches.

His immediate goal is more competition ("The biggest feather in my cap is being selected for the U.S. team") but for the future he wants his doctorate and a job teaching on a university level.

Another native easterner on hand was Lieutenant-Governor John Nicholson, who came to B.C. 46 years ago.

In officially opening the program, Lieutenant-Governor Nicholson said the trees of his native New Brunswick "fade into insignificance" when compared with the trees of B.C.

Larry Downing's victory in the speed climbing was recorded in 37.65 seconds. His brother, Ron, was second.

Other winners:

DIVISION A
Peavey log roll, Cole Schaffaris; underhand chop, Clayton Stewart; power saw bucking, Art Williams; Ladysmith; springboard chop, Cole Schaffaris; log baring, Art Williams.

DIVISION B (novice)
Springboard chop, Ron Hartill; Sooke; underhand chop, Dick Herrling; Sooke; peavey log roll, Grant Smith; Cwichean; log baring, Owen Carney; Squamish; speed climbing, John Cotterill; Duncan.

BABY SHOW
Best baby, Clayton Robinson, 12 months, 1729 Kimber, Victoria; best Sooke baby, Rodney George, 15 months; best baby six months and under, Cheryl Hugert, four months, 3222 Millgrove, Victoria.

diver Al Elmer, 28, of Victoria, ripped an aerial from the parked Downing car and put a dent in the hood. Al, who has been sky diving six years, escaped injury.

"My main concern was that no one was hurt," said Mr. Downing.

Added to this was the straightforward manner of Brian Herlihy, who showed his usual concern for other loggers after being named best all-round logger for the third consecutive year.

Brian, a 38-year-old father of two, has been winning with monotonous regularity since moving to Sooke three years ago from New Zealand.

He has had claim to various world logging titles, as have Clayton Stewart and Cole Schaffaris, the two Australialians who tied in second place, two points behind the leader. The crowd that turned out for the competitions and other attractions of All Sooke Day was estimated at close to 12,000, a record gathering for an event that began in 1934.

It was a hungry crowd that ate a ton of barbecued salmon, almost as much barbecued beef, countless hotdogs and a "sea" of clam chowder.

The slight possibility of bad weather gave way to brilliant sunshine by the time the program began, adding to what has been described as the dry miracle of All Sooke Day. The event has never been marred by rain.

In topping all other competitors there were 60 from B.C., Washington, Oregon, New York State and Australia.

Indian Affairs Minister Jean Chretien could find himself cooling his heels in Victoria Monday.

He has sent notification to the Indian regional office in Vancouver that he will meet in Victoria Monday with Indian leaders, but all Vancouver Island Indians, Saturday voted against any meeting.

"Just one week ago we sent him a telegram objecting to the high handed way in which he called meetings, without consulting us, and then we get a telephone call giving us three days notice of another meeting," said Tsartlip Chief Philip Paul.

"He had apparently written to the regional office saying he would have three meetings with B.C. Indians, starting with one in Victoria Monday. There wasn't even time for a reply."

"Well, if he arrives he'll find no welcome mat out."

Politics Blocking Sex Education

By BILL STAVDAL

The president of the B.C. School Trustees' Association charged Saturday that the education department is afraid to implement a new elementary health program which includes sex education.

James Campbell of Saturna Island said the government was generally reluctant to make any but minor changes in education for fear of rocking the boat with an election in the offing.

Planning for the new elementary health program began three years ago. The completed section on family life and sex education was given to education Minister Donald Bracken early this year.

Several members of the committee which produced the family life and sex education section have said privately that they believe politics is all that is keeping the course out of the classroom this fall.

The B.C. Parent-Teacher Federation, the B.C. School Trustees' Association and a 1968 commission of the B.C. Teachers' Federation all have recommended family life education in the elementary schools.

Mr. Campbell was a member of the steering committee which in 1966 began formulating the outlines of the new health program for Grades 1 to 7.

"The committee met a number of times and came up with what I thought was a remarkable concept," he said Saturday.

"It deals with health in a very different way. It's no longer adequate just to teach kids how to brush their teeth. This course will teach them how to deal with their environment, and about their relationships with other people."

"It's an approach to helping them understand what they are as human beings, and how they relate to other people."

"It doesn't feature sex. It's not a manual on sex."

The course largely reflects the ideas of Dr. George Szasz, a member of the University of British Columbia's medicine faculty, said Mr. Campbell.

Dr. Szasz, who was chairman of the steering committee, is known for his view that sex education should be continued throughout the school years, beginning with the simplest and most basic concepts.

"But the work is just being wasted," said Mr. Campbell. "I think they (the government) are afraid of it."

"I don't think the government is interested in doing anything very positive in education. They have been taking a defensive attitude."

"Neither the association nor the teachers (The B.C. Teachers' Federation) has received any encouragement lately."

At the department of education, questions on the new course are directed to the minister, Mr. Bracken, could not be reached Saturday.

Family life education is now taught in a number of B.C. school districts at local initiative. There is no departmental course.

Three young Saanich boys got a glimpse into the past Saturday when they caught a cut-throat trout in Haynes Creek, just below the motor vehicle testing station on McKenzie Avenue.

"I knew there used to be fish in the creek," said Mrs. W. D. Lane, of 4000 Cedar Hill Cross Road, mother of the boy who actually caught the fish, but I didn't think the water was clean enough for trout."

Her son, Michael, 10, was on a frog-hunting expedition with his friends, nine-year-old Norman and eight-year-old Allen Bernier, of 4005 Cedar Hill Cross Road, when they noticed the trout flashing about in the shallow water.

"He just picked it up by hand and came running up to the house," said Mrs. Lane.

"It's quite thin and looks as if it came up to spawn."

She said the seven-inch-long trout was still alive in a household sink, but not moving its tail very well.

"If it survives, we'll probably take it down to Beaver Lake and let it go. I can't see doing away with it after all this."

In 1965, the B.C. School Trustees' Association passed a resolution calling for "courses in introductory physiology and anatomy being included in the elementary school curriculum," and a course in "sex and family life education" offered at an unspecified grade level in collaboration with medical health officers.

Leslie Peterson, then education minister, later replied that a steering committee had been set up "to consider the whole question of health education in schools and in teacher education."

The curriculum revision committee which produced the section on family life education is also working on elementary courses dealing with alcohol, tobacco and drugs.

If Electorate Wishes

Aims of Curtis Municipal Only

Mayor Hugh Curtis of Saanich said Saturday that, "contrary to recurring rumors," he is not interested in the federal or provincial political fields but he is "anxious to carry on in Saanich for a further two years, if that is the wish of the electorate."

"In the foreseeable future, I will be a candidate for just one office, the one I hold," the mayor said. The whole field of local government is becoming tremendously challenging and very important, the mayor said, and he would like to stay in it for some time yet.

The next scheduled election in the municipality is in December.

Artifact Joins Museum

An oolichan cooking tank carved by the late Mungo Martin about 20 years ago was added Friday to the provincial museum's ethnological collection.

Described by Peter Macneil, curator of ethnology, as "an outstanding artifact," the seven-foot-long tank of red cedar and copper was used to render the oil of the oolichan or candlefish. Kwakwaka'wakw tribe member Peter Smith of Tsuman Island, who had the tank carved for him by Mr. Martin, sold it to the museum.

Mr. Smith is said to be one of the best remaining grease makers on the northwest coast. The rendered oil is often used to flavor barbecued fish, especially salmon.

Husband-Wife Team Makes Fair Combo

By JOAN MASON HURLEY

"He yelled at me once, and I got mad. He was completely justified, only for a moment I forgot it was a play."

How does it feel to be directed by one's husband? Harriet Allen, Ophelia in Hamlet and Portia in Merchant of Venice, unlike most North American wives, is by now entirely used to taking orders from her husband, Ralph Allen, director of the Victoria Fair plays and head of the University of Victoria theatre department.

Diminutive, soft-spoken (off the stage) Harriet says she has respect for her husband's intelligence, and trusts his opinion. "He is my severest critic," she says.

This doesn't mean the follow in blind obedience. She has a master's degree in fine arts from Yale University, where she met Ralph Allen, who is a Ph.D. Together they collaborated on a book about theatre.

And do they eat theatre for breakfast, lunch and dinner? Naturally. That is, when they stop to eat at all.

Harriet Allen says she has "complete faith" in her husband. "We discuss a role intellectually." When she is convinced of the approach, she starts to work on the emotional side of the character.

The Ophelia they have agreed upon is totally non-sentimental, although she is very much in love with Hamlet. She consents to spy upon him in the famous "nunnery" scene, only hoping he will vindicate himself.

In American public schools, The Merchant of Venice has been scratched from the reading lists since Hitler began his regime.

Is it an anti-semitic play? The only Italian in the Victoria Fair production doesn't think so.

Richard Galuppi, American character actor who is also Polonius in Hamlet, is playing the coveted role of Shylock.

As he and director Ralph Allen see Shylock, he is not a pleasant man, but then the Christians in the play are not all beautiful people either. Shylock is pathetically anxious to be included in their circle. If he is vindictive, it is no more than the Venetians who have spat upon him deserve.

In fact, says Mr. Galuppi, Portia is a "little devil." In the famous "quality of mercy" speech, Harriet Allen plays Portia as if she were groping for words, stumped for an answer to the pound-of-flesh problem. When she hits upon a solution, she is delighted and plays to the gallery for all she is worth.

It is this sort of original approach to the play which promises to make Merchant of Venice with its revolving sets and colorful crowd scenes another jewel in the crown of Victoria Fair. Opening is at 7-20 p.m. Monday.

'What's All the Fuss About?' Perfect Model Has a Flaw

SYDNEY — Because of its immigration laws, Australia is remarkably short of oriental models. This is normally not a great source of worry, but recently one of the big advertising agencies was looking for such a girl to launch a whole new range of exotic fabrics.

To get the right girl the agency eventually held auditions in Sydney for the job.

When the models had all come and gone there was only one contender, Lesley Adams, a beautiful 28-year-old, Thai, exotic, born in Singapore. Lesley Adams was the key point of the big campaign.

Huge photographs blossomed on all the billboards. Underneath each picture was the caption: "This is a woman. It was taken two million years or so for her to develop to this stage of perfection." Rarely had a model had such instant success and Lesley seemed destined for a spectacular career in modelling.

The photographs were just as enthusiastic. Lesley was the girl of the week in the serious national daily newspaper the Australian and the fashion magazines were also packed with photographs. An Australian Twiggys seemed to be on the launching pad when suddenly everything stopped. No more pictures, no more interviews and suddenly the advertising campaign finished. What was the mystery?

According to Lesley, there wasn't any mystery. "I don't see what all the fuss is about. I'm just here to make the clothes look good and I think I do just that," he said.

Right, of course. He does make the clothes look good.

But they're sensitive about those things out here. A man's place is on the football ground, not in a little black dress. Lesley would appear to be one pioneer who made his effort a little too early.

Rest for Restless

Thousands of young North Americans are taking advantage of modern transportation methods to see the country before they settle down. Some of them are troubled, the majority are just satisfying an ages-old restlessness-of youth.

Unfortunately, not many North American communities welcome penniless strangers, and they end up in jail charged with vagrancy. Victoria's Cool-Aid, a youth-run, self-help agency, is in its second year of providing accommodation for these young people.

Charles Bell, 21, of Victoria, a staff member, said Friday that Cool-Aid exists to provide legal, medical and family counselling, to aid drug "freakouts" and potential suicides and to house transient young people for up to three nights. This is all provided free.

"We have volunteer professional resources to aid us, if necessary," he said. "We don't pretend to have the knowledge to deal with all cases."

"In the case of juvenile runaways, the Family and Children's Service and/or the parents are notified."

He said a recent reference to Cool-Aid taking care of transients and draft-dodgers was misleading.

"We help anybody who needs help," he said. "We provide information on legal matters, and that includes immigration. Why they want it is between them and the immigration people."

Nine staff members are responsible for the running of Cool-Aid, three of whom work full-time.

Cool Aid has recently rented a house at 853 Balmoral, where there is accommodation for 15 persons, including staff. There are two dormitories, one for girls and one for boys, where mattresses and bedding are provided. The staff cooks the meals and keeps the place clean.

Cool-Aid was supported by private donations, many of them through churches, for the first year.

This year there has been support from the provincial government, the Greater Victoria Council of Churches and the four Greater Victoria municipalities. Private donations are still being received.

"It's not our policy to turn away anyone," Mr. Bell said. "We don't moralize. We fill valid needs. We offer help to those who need it."

Doing The Town

With DOROTHY FRASER

Wilson's are having a summer sale . . . because as sales go, this isn't in the "monster" class . . . but for the past couple of days department heads at Wilson's have been quietly going around marking down price tags on all sorts of things throughout the store . . . and starting on Monday, you'll find bargains that will make your head spin! . . . In the ladies dept., we saw spring coats . . . summer dresses (crisp, cotton, drip dries) . . . skirts . . . a few jumpers . . . patio suits . . . going at a fraction of their regular price (like one $100 coat for a mere $39.95!) . . . Men's sport coats, slacks and suits . . . in broken sizes, . . . with something in most sizes . . . are reduced anywhere from 20% to 40% . . . Synthetic knit turtleneck pullovers are 1/2 off . . . short-sleeved polo shirts can be picked up for $4.76 . . . and white dress shirts, regularly $6, for just $3.81 . . . English socks, regularly $2.25 are 3 pairs for $4! . . . T-shirts, dress shirts and little girls' summer dresses are on sale in the Junior Shop . . . while at Madam and Eve, next door you'll find past suits, summer dresses, 3-piece dress and coat ensembles . . . terry cloth tops and shorts . . . and a few groovy printed hat and scarf sets . . . all drastically reduced! . . . Remember, sale starts on Monday . . . W & J Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177.

Men's fashions . . . inspired by Chanel . . . are being designed by an American woman, Jackie Rogers, who showed her first male collection last month.

C'est magnifique! . . .

We don't think "magnificent" is too strong an adjective to describe the ivory crepe dinner gown we were shown in Eaton's Import Room the other day . . . By Marty, of Zurich, Switzerland, it's superbly cut . . . with long fluid lines to literally caress the body . . . The crepe and lining are heavy pure silk . . . long transparent sleeves of silk georgette caught at the wrists with a cuff embroidered with gold thread, pearls, diamante and crystal beads . . . which also bands the high, stand-up neckline . . . It's a gown fit for a queen . . . simple . . . beautifully elegant . . . A gown full of poise and subtlety and sophistication! . . . Among other new arrivals for fall are knit suits from Avagold, of Florence, Italy . . . Fantastically smart is a two-piece suit in coral, olive and gold plaid . . . with big flared gold buttons fastening the jacket, and a very wide-linked gold chain belt . . . Another Avagold knit is a 2-piece suit with navy box pleated skirt and shell with the scarf attached . . . bright scarlet jacket . . . and there's an elegant little black knit turtleneck with ribbed gold chain belt . . . These Avagold knits are distinctly different from knits as we know them . . . and we suggest you pay an early visit to . . . Eaton's Import Room, 383-7161, local 242.

We may soon see a return of shoe styles of the 30's . . . Open toes, wedge and platform soles.

Very attractive lower priced English furniture . . .

When we paid one of our periodic visits to Home Furniture the other day, we found them unpacking a shipment of furniture which had just arrived from England . . . Such very attractive pieces! . . . We saw chests and nests of tables . . . china cabinets with both plain and curved fronts . . . corner cabinets and drop leaf dinette tables . . . several desks which would do any room proud . . . one especially nice little secret-drawer desk with three drawers . . . Oak, walnut and mahogany are in the main part of these various pieces . . . which will be sold at very low prices . . . excellent quality, they're not quite up to Gallery standards . . . Price tags hadn't been put on yet, so we can't tell you much about them . . . except to quote Mr. Bartholomew who says there's nothing in Canada that equals this new English furniture for price . . . You really can't beat British workmanship . . . and believe us, this furniture has it all over anything we've ever seen in the moderate price range . . . Even The Gallery's fine English furniture is being sold by Home at prices that compare favorably (and are sometimes even lower) than the same lines of furniture on display at big London stores like Harrods, Maple and Waring & Gillow! . . . Home Furniture Company, 875 Fort St., 383-5138.

This fall's fashion colors are subdued and earthy, with red the dominant bright note.

Ragtime galore at Miss Frith's . . .

A lot of people in this town of ours are gloating over recently-acquired bargains from Miss Frith's July clearance sale . . . and if you think perhaps all the good things have gone long since . . . we want to reassure you that this is far from being the case! . . . We were in the store the other day and saw many number of plums just there for the picking . . . Another thing we wish to stress is that all these reduced items are from Miss Frith's regular stock . . . We saw models, one-of-a-kind hats by Andre, Dior and other famous designers . . . reduced by as much as one half (Got your hat for the Garden Party yet? This is a great opportunity!) . . . Groups of quite charming chapeaux priced at $2.99, $3.99 and $5.99 . . . There are coats and suits . . . dresses and handbags . . . and umbrellas . . . going for practically a song . . . As a matter of fact, there have been further markdowns this week . . . especially among the better dresses including formal and wedding gowns . . . We noticed quite a number of smart things in larger sizes . . . good news for you less-than-svelte ladies . . . and there's a whole rack of dresses reduced to just $10 . . . mighty good-looking dresses they are, too! . . . So hurry in to Miss Frith's and find yourself some beautiful bargains! . . . Miss Frith Millinery & Fashion, 1617 Douglas St., 383-7181.

Tea for two . . . or for a dozen . . .

Afternoon tea . . . attractively served . . . is such an integral part of gracious living that it really demands something special in the way of china . . . and if you subscribe to this view of ours, we think you'll like to see the quite lovely bone china tea service newly arrived at Sydney Reynolds. It's called Grosvenor High Summer . . . English, of course . . . and it's very reasonably priced . . . A "stack" . . . consisting of 21 pieces . . . six cups and saucers, small plates, sugar and creamer and a cake plate . . . is just $34.50 . . . Then there are tall tea and coffee pots, coffee cups, TV sets, etc. . . all open stock . . . Even Pearly Gate Won't Stop Elsa

About a year or so ago a housewife in West Virginia was trying to set a record for being buried underground alive.

She dug out an oversized tomb, said goodbye to her loved ones and her way of life and descended into her self-chosen grave with only the barest essentials: her toothbrush, and (are you ready?) her telephone.

She reminded me of my friend, Elsa Ding. When Elsa goes, she'll take her telephone with her. To her the telephone is the greatest invention since sea. It's equipped with a 500-foot extension cord, a directory of the eastern United States and a tank of oxygen. She rings me up on the average of three times a day. "Hi, Luvie, you busy?" she chirps at 7 a.m.

"I am having labor pains three minutes apart, Elsa," I answer.

"Then I won't keep you long. How have you been?" "Pretty much the same, as when you called an hour ago. If there's any change, I'll have one of the kids call you."

"Elsa, I think I hear someone knocking at my door."

"If it's important, they'll come again," she says.

"Guess what I'm having for dinner?"

"Could I call you back, Elsa, one of the kids is bleeding."

"Mine do it all the time just to get attention."

"Why don't you call your mother, Elsa?"

"I did. She hung up. Every one is busy this morning. I called dial-a-saint and got a recording. Did you know the number for the time of day has been changed? Want to take it out?"

"Not really. I've got to go now. If I don't get the dog inside, he'll bite the mailman."

"Some mailmen ought to be bitten. Did I tell you I called the White House last week? You'd think they've have an unlisted number with all the nuts around."

"I'm going to hang up now. The firemen are here."

"Hey, I got an obscene caller yesterday and you know what? He hung up on me. How does that grab you?"

"Elsa, if you don't hang up, I'll have you arrested for harassment."

"Good grief, look at the time. I'd love to talk to you, Luvie, but I've got to run the kids over to ball practice. Tell you what, I'll call you when I get back."

Elsa's a dear woman, but I have a feeling when I go to meet my Maker I will no sooner get there when St. Peter will hand me a princess phone and say, "It's for you. A woman named Elsa."

Machiko Wins Over Fight Mob

By DAN HAFNER

(Contributor Los Angeles Times Service)

LOS ANGELES — Machiko Sasazaki is young, pretty and petite. As a teacher of Japanese dancing she fits the picture perfectly.

But as a fight manager? No way.

There she was, however, attractive with long black hair and wearing a miniskirt, all business as she directed her fighter, Katsuhiko Harada, in a workout at the Alexandria Hotel gym here.

Miss Sasazaki is here to represent Tokyo's most famous boxing family when Harada, the bantamweight champion of Japan, fights Mexico's Fermín Gomez Friday night.

Her father, Takeshi Sasazaki, is the best-known fight manager in Japan. He has 50 professional fighters and they have won 10 Oriental or national titles. Another, Katsuhiko's brother, Fighting Harada, has held the world flyweight and bantamweight titles and soon will try for the featherweight crown. Machiko's mother is a well-known fight promoter.

Miss Sasazaki, oldest of three sisters, was practically born into boxing. She remembers watching fighters work out when she was barely able to walk. At 25 she is getting her first chance to go out on her own as a manager.

"My father and mother are in Australia, where Fighting Harada will try to win the featherweight title from Johnny Famechon on July 28," she said in near-perfect English, learned in one year at the Cambria Adult School for foreign students here. "It was my father's idea that I was ready to manage. I am very nervous, but thrilled at the chance. I won't know how I did until I get back home."

The Sasazakis could not have sent a better emissary. Miss Sasazaki has a big change in her check that shows when she smiles, which is often. Her personality, not to mention her figure, has the fight mob agog.

It may be only temporary, but she has raised boxing standards tremendously in just a few days. The usual strong language used around the gym is missing.

Recent Examples Spur Get-Tough Plans

Law, Order Will Rule at Pop Festivals

By KING LEE
Law and order will be first priority in upcoming pop music festivals in North America.

The "get-tough" attitude of promoters and producers follows violence at the recent Newport 69 Pop Festival at Devonshire Downs, in California's San Fernando Valley, and at the Denver Pop Festival.

At the California show, trouble started when capacity was reached and several hundred youngsters were locked out. In the Denver incident, it was a plain case of gatecrashing.

So from now on, the festivals will be strictly supervised.

Producers of the Woodstock Music and Art Fair, to be held next month in Walkill, N.Y., will spend $100,000 of a $750,000 budget on security.

Next to the $300,000-plus talent bill, it is the highest expense.

Wes Pomeroy, a law enforcement co-ordinator with the former president Johnson administration, will head the security operation at Walkill. He will use 300 off-duty police officers in plainclothes and uniforms.

The next time you buy tickets for a rock festival, think about the fact that 74 cents of every dollar goes for policing the event.

Clear Speech, Pen Gaining Importance

By KITTE TURMELL

As the world grows smaller, with fast transportation and many communication media, the need for clear thinking, precise speaking and writing grows greater. Fortunately, the same principles hold, whether you are talking to a fellow-worker, a summer student, a new boy in town, or a stranger from across the world.

An easy-going, friendly expert on international conversation is Dr. Berent Enc. His specialty is semantics. He is on leave from Oxford University in England, teaching at University of Wisconsin. He took time out to serve as professor of philosophy during a summer session at the University of California at Los Angeles.

His flashing black eyes radiated the enthusiasm which was underlined by his contagious smile, during our interview.

This is his prescription for starting social conversation: "Make people feel you are interested in them. Ask questions about what they do and like. Show interest in their responses."

"Avoid asking the big, vague questions, such as 'What are your ambitions?' at a first meeting. To answer such questions would take a long time and great familiarity."

"Also skip very personal questions."

If a person's name or appearance indicates he is from another country, should you ask where he is from, or what is his background and nationality?

"Of course," said Dr. Enc. "But don't bombard him with so many questions that you seem more curious than sincerely interested. Don't get too involved in such areas as religion, political systems, prejudices, during what should begin as a light social conversation."

"Be sensitive to the other person's attitude. Gauge reactions. If he shows a lack of attention, if his eyes wander, take the cue. He may not be interested in talking to you at that moment. He may have a date, or a problem he doesn't want to discuss. End talk smoothly, without cutting off a conversation abruptly. A casual remark — 'It was nice to talk to you' — eases the break-away."

If your conversation partner seems shy, or answers in monosyllables, word your questions so they inspire longer answers: "What are your favorite records? What sports do you like to watch on TV?"

If your own self-consciousness or enthusiasm makes you talk a mile a minute, slow down. You may sound as though you are jabbering gibberish.

"Practice slowing down," said Dr. Enc. "Ask a friend to tip you off when you are talking too fast. Read aloud very slowly. Record your conversation and play it back. Don't get so carried away with your own talk that you fail to notice the other person is unable to follow, or out in."

Letters

By KITTE TURMELL

Dear Kittle Turmell: I am 13 and I am in love with a man 21 and he loves me. We meet almost every night. I am afraid to tell my parents about him. We plan to get married when I finish school. What should I do? Confused.

Dear Confused: Talk this over with your parents right away. You are asking for trouble and know that or you would not be writing me. Your age-differences could cause nothing but conflict, while you are in your early teens. Pay more attention to your class-mates and boys within two or three years of your age. Give the man 21, courting a girl 13, time to grow up.

Dear Kittle: I'm 14 and I have been going steady for one year. I like the boy very much, but we don't seem to get along. He lives quite a distance from me, but when he comes over we always seem to have a fight. What should I do? Wondering.

Dear Wondering: Perhaps you should suggest that you both go with others for awhile instead of going steady.

Dear Kittle: I met a very nice young man, and I fell in love with him. My problem is that he doesn't pay attention to me. He told me that he liked me but I don't believe him. Could you tell me how I could win his love? Anxious.

Dear Anxious: Unfortunately it has been an age-old custom for the man to declare his love to the girl. Why wait around for this one when there are probably others you could meet who would show more interest in you?

real, CKY, Winnipeg, CKXL, Calgary, CHED, Edmonton, and CKLG, Vancouver are members.

Victoria's CJVI has been inducted into the group as an associate-member.

Each week the stations will play three Canadian-produced or Canadian-artist singles equally and thus ensure national exposure of the talent rather than keeping it as a regional success.

If you're worried that A Night with the Collectors will be rained out at Royal Athletic Park later this month don't. There's a built-in clause in the rental agreement which states that in event of inclement weather, the concert will be moved into the Memorial Arena.

HK LPs: Ike and Tina Turner In Person, backed by the Ikeettes, is a solid rhythm-and-blues album. Some of the good cuts are Everyday People, Sweet Soul Music, Son of a Preacher Man, Respect and Please, Please, Please.

Ray Charles, who doesn't seem to be quite as popular these days, has a new set out, Doing His Thing. It, too, is r and b, with a big band sound. Upcoming group, Cal Mother and the All-Night News Boys, have an album which features their single hit, Good Old Rock 'N' Roll, titled The Street Given. And the Street Takeaway. This is a group with lots of sound and lots of personality.

Hit Singles: Canada's The Guess Who slow it down in Laughing. The other side is called Undun and it is also a ballad.

Marekresh Express, by Crosby, Stills and Nash, is already receiving plenty of airplay.

Elvis Presley's Heartbreak Hotel is making a comeback with the Blues Magoos.

Wilde Recital Given Tumultuous Hand

By JOAN MARION HURLEY

I have said that David Wilde is a poet at the piano. Perhaps it is just as well that he is going back to England on Monday.

Of course, the fault is partly Beethoven's, but the larger share of blame must belong to Mr. Wilde. He has positively no business to make one cry in a public concert hall, but this was precisely the result of his ineffably beautiful reading of the Pathétique Sonata in the MacLaurin Auditorium Saturday night.

The pianist probed the very heights and depths of the human spirit in this work, as it moved from passion and tenderness in the allegro movement through calm religious sublimity in the adagio to a joyous radiance in the rondo.

Mr. Wilde played three more Beethoven sonatas. First, a definitive virtuoso display in the F major, Opus 54, in which his fingers moved so fast they could not be seen.

The G Major, Opus 79, was a fascinating juxtaposition of brittle and tender passages. The D Minor, Opus 51, was dramatically intense with its two tempi of very fast and very slow.

LISZT, TOO

Beethoven sonatas, always so deeply involving and emotional, were contrasted after the intermission by Liszt, a composer much favored by Mr. Wilde.

The Sonata in B minor was an incredible pyrotechnic display of velocity, power and superb technique.

Then in complete contrast came a delicate, brief Nocturne with a touch as soft as gossamer.

CLOSING NOTE

The concert closed with the fantastic Reminiscences of Norma, which Mr. Wilde has recorded. There was a grandeur, a nobility and incredible versatility in the contrasted styles exhibited in this piece.

Mr. Wilde played for two hours with no written music and with complete absence of any mannerisms. At the conclusion, the applause was the most tumultuous I have ever heard in Victoria at a piano recital. It was most heartily deserved.

On second thought, it would be nice if Mr. Wilde came back soon.

The next concert in this series is at 8 p.m. Tuesday in the MacLaurin Auditorium. The Merchant of Venice opens at 7:30 p.m. Monday at the MacPherson.

Phone Operator Declares 'Plague on Both Houses'

Without strike pay, unemployment insurance or welfare, at least one B.C. Telephone Co. employee is declaring a plague on both houses in the three-week-old telephone strike.

Owen Nicholls has been a telephone operator for 12 years, but is not a union member.

"I feel I have a right to speak out as an individual as I'm neither company nor union," she said. "Most of us are working girls, many the sole support of three or four children."

LITTLE HOUSE

"With no money coming in, what do we do? I can see myself losing the little house I'm trying to buy."

"Well, that's all right for me. I have no family and can go back to living in one room, but what about the people with families?"

Mrs. Nicholls said when she joined the telephone company it was a friendly place to work.

'BIG BUSINESS'

"The customers were friendly and were content to come along with us as we tried to get through to the people they wanted."

"Now that the telephone company is big business, the customers have lost patience. They demand immediate service and want to call us stupid if they don't get a connection in two seconds."

Mrs. Nicholls said that as soon as the strike is over she is going to give notice and get another job.

'ASHAMED'

"I've become ashamed to say that I work for the telephone company," she said.

Mrs. Nicholls said workers without other income except wages were rapidly getting behind in payments and dipping into any savings they might have.

She said she had noticed efforts to gain some sympathy for the supervisors taking over service and working 12-hour shifts daily.

FOR SECURITY

"When this is all over they'll just be some over-sated, over-wealthy individuals, while we, who looked to the company for a little security in return for our labor, will have nothing — not even the few little things we started out with."

Mrs. Nicholls said she had thought of crossing picket lines, "but I'm only four feet, 11½ inches, and I'm afraid."

"Isn't that a terrible thing — to feel afraid of fellow workers?"

Woman Named Purchaser

Mrs. Elnora Bowering has been appointed Saanich municipality's first full-time purchasing agent.

Mrs. Bowering has been with the municipality 11 years, first as secretary to the municipal engineer and latterly in charge of purchasing and stores for the engineering department.

The new position, recommended in an efficiency study, was put out for competition.

Around Town

Extra Lanes Ahead

Tenders will be called for reconstruction of 2.95 miles of the Patricia Bay Highway between Cherry Tree Bend and Rogers Road, as a four-lane divided freeway. Premier Bennett has announced.

The project is estimated at $2,150,000 and is part of a $5,000,000 program to relieve pressure on the existing route for at least five years.

An Esquimalt couple had their vegetable garden ransacked Friday night, and if they could have it their way, they would make the culprits repent it.

Mr. and Mrs. George Dunlop of 833 Ellery said vandals had torn up a row of young carrots and trampled down a row of young peas.

"They didn't even eat them — just threw them around," Mrs. Dunlop said.

The clearinghouse for Greater Victoria youth groups — Victoria Communications Centre — has called a meeting for 7:30 p.m. Wednesday at the YM-YWCA.

The centre was recently formed to give out information on youth groups and to promote communication and action among the widely divergent youth groups in the city. Information is available at 592-7970, 383-3914 and 382-5589.

Chief Hummingbird of Brentwood, Leonard Paul, will open the Canada Day show of the India-Canada Cultural Association in Oak Bay junior high school at 8 p.m. Saturday.

He will be joined on the program by the Katherine Costain Dancers, Philippine dancers, a Norwegian choir and Polish singers and dancers. There will be East Indian music.

Week on the Prairies

Paint-In Preferred to Fairs

A group of residents in the Victoria Park district of south-east Calgary want to stop the Calgary Exhibition and Stampede from expanding over their demolished homes. They want to stay where they are and have a paint-in.

Lloyd Fairbrother, chairman of a residents' committee, claims the residents have appealed to Robert Andrus, the federal minister in charge of housing, to "help us help ourselves make our district as it once was — a darn nice place to live."

A group that calls itself The Voice of Western Canadians has sent a letter to the Canadian Radio Television Commission saying that a French-language television station for the city of Edmonton is "neither warranted nor wanted in Alberta."

The commission last month heard an application from the CBC for a French-language television station. No decision has been announced.

Mr. Justice John Howard Sissons, who retired in 1966 as the first judge of the Northwest Territories Court, died in Edmonton at 77.

Speaking at the annual meeting of the Canadian College of Teachers here, provincial Education Minister Robert Clark said increasing education costs in Alberta contain the ingredients for a potential revolt of taxpayers.

Albertans can expect to receive a new provincial-sponsored magazine, Alberta: A Land for Living. Designed to provide information on activities and programs of government, the glossy paper and illustrated monthly magazine will be mailed to every household in Alberta at a cost to the government of 15 cents each plus three to six cents mailing charges.

The Manitoba New Democratic Party has sent a telegram to Prime Minister Trudeau urging that the 1968-69 crop year be extended one month to Sept. 1 to help ease problems facing the prairie farmer.

The telegram says the extension would help ensure all delivery points had an equal quota by the end of the crop year.

It was drafted by party leader Ed Schreyer and his caucus of elected members at closed weekend meetings in Brandon.

Lack of space in Brandon University's education department has left the university's Students' Union president without admission for the fall term.

Harkishan Bhagat, a 1968 science graduate from Brandon, was singled out earlier this year as primary reason for the resignation of Brandon University President Dr. John Robins.

City police in Winnipeg have accepted a 10-per-cent salary increase, bringing wages in line with those of most other Western Canadian city forces. Rookie constables salaries go to $575 a month from $520, retroactive to Jan. 1.

Island Chess Board

Lagging Homework Gets Needed Needle

By RAY KERR

It's pretty hot out, and it's pretty quiet in the world of chess and it seems to be a perfect opportunity for a number of brief items.

The first one concerns B.C.'s junior hope for the Canadian championship, Peter Blyasas of Vancouver.

Mr. Blyasas, 18, had been getting a little lax with his chess homework earlier in the year, causing considerable concern to a number of his boosters, including Russ Vogler of Burnaby, tournament director-in-chief of the B.C. Chess Federation.

Mr. Blyasas played a few so-so tournaments, and in order to wake him up, Mr. Vogler had several of his defeats published in the Northwest chess magazine.

Mr. Blyasas told me frankly he did not care for this one little bit, but that's exactly what Mr. Vogler was counting on.

The result was that Mr. Blyasas captured a share of the provincial title and finished seventh in the giant international Strawberry Open.

He should send Mr. Vogler a thank-you note.

The B.C. Chess Federation has held its annual meeting, reports Walter Battye of the Victoria Silver Threads Chess Club, and things are looking good for next year.

He said it is almost certain a big tournament will be held in Victoria next year. It'll be called Southern Vancouver Island Open.

He says he's been assured of co-operation by all local clubs, so it should be an interesting endeavor.

Who says chess players have little time for anything else? Take Vancouver's junior hope Jonathan Berry, 15. At the moment, he's the highest-rated under-15 chess player in North America.

And because of this, Mr. Berry has been awarded a six-week scholarship at Whitman College in Walla Walla, Wash. The scholarship — and Mr. Berry is already attending the course in mathematics — is the direct result of Mr. Berry's chess rating.

Unbelievable? Yes. True? Yes.

U.S. champion Larry Evans, who played such fine chess to win a share of the Strawberry Open title, is planning a fall tour.

He'd like to come to Victoria, but wants a minimum of 25 players at $5 per head. If anyone in Victoria, or elsewhere on Vancouver Island, is interested, he can get in touch with Mr. Evans at Chess Tours, Box 1182, Reno, Nev. 95904.

The price of $5 for a simultaneous exhibition may seem a little steep, but then how many times do we have an opportunity to get a U.S. champion on the island? Looking at it from that angle, it's worth it.

A double-ring ceremony was solemnized on June 21, 1969, at 7 p.m. in St. Andrew's Anglican Church, Sidney, when Patricia Ann, elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Downey, was united in marriage to Mr. Larry Flansbury, son of Mr. and Mrs. Flansbury, Esquimalt. The ceremony was officiated by Rev. R. G. Thompson.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was lovely in a floor-length gown of white lace, with a high neckline and long sleeves. Her hair was styled in a short, wavy bob. She carried a bouquet of pink carnations and white roses. The groom wore a tuxedo and carried a sword. The ceremony was officiated by Rev. R. G. Thompson.

Save time and shop by phone. Our helpful phone order board opens at 8:30 p.m. daily to serve you. One call does it all. Use your handy PBA or charge account.

This convertible upright features Hoover's famous triple-action cleaning that beats as it sweeps as it cleans. This unique process first lifts the carpet on a cushion of air and combs out the pile to remove surface lint, then gently taps the carpet to bring the dirt buried deep inside the pile to the surface, and finally swoops it all away with strong suction power. There are two pile adjustments... one for regular carpeting and another for deep pile carpet. The handle locks in three positions, and the wheels are broad track for easy mobility. Two disposable bags are included; tools are optional. One year guarantee on parts and labour. Come see this Hoover in action at this low price!

CAPE KENNEDY — The United States this week commits its national pride and a $24-billion-dollar-engineering effort to showing the world it can still fulfill a dream.

It will send three men on a human adventure of mythological proportions, with the whole of the civilized world invited to watch — for better or worse.

Just a little more than eight years after John Kennedy proposed the incredible voyage, Apollo 11 is about to take off for man's first landing on the moon. The journey — to begin with the launching here at 6:32 a.m. Pacific Daylight

Time Wednesday — is fraught with perils understood by few except the astronauts who must face them.

The people who have brought Project Apollo to its climax believe the event will leave an indelible impression on the psyche of man, upending his horizons like no other exploration in history.

It will show what Kennedy felt the world had to know: that the United States would lead in opening the space age.

What a tragedy it would be, a space official said recently, "if we had left the

- Astronaut rehearsals taper off. Page 16

Russians to explore the moon and all we to offer the world was Vietnam."

Nevertheless, many have come to look upon Project Apollo as a tragedy itself, where the United States dreamed the wrong dream and squandered its talent and its wealth on an empty adventure.

A public opinion poll to be published this week will show the majority of Americans still are dubious about the race for the moon, even on the brink of its thrilling climax.

A contingent of Poor People plans to picket the launch centre to dramatize their own status against the background of the costly moon program.

can now have about exploring the moon. They sense there is far more excitement about it in other parts of the world than there is in the United States.

"Americans can be almost too blase and sophisticated," said Dr. David Reisman, professor of social sciences at Harvard. "For some people the more things you can reject the more sophisticated you are."

Borman: Orbiting Stations Red Goal

CAPE KENNEDY Fla. (UPI) — Apollo 8 commander Frank Borman said Saturday Soviet President Nikolai Podgorny told him Russia plans to put large manned space stations in orbit around the moon.

Borman, reporting on his recent 10-day tour of the Soviet Union, said that launch timetables were not discussed, but "my impression is that the Russian space program is about on a parallel to ours, at least as to designs and future hopes."

"The president of the USSR told me that they would have large space stations, manned space stations, that they would put into orbit around the moon."

"MORE FLIGHTS"
"He told me they were continuing the space program with vigor and that there would be many more manned flights."

Borman said he got the impression the Soviets also are actively engaged in a manned lunar landing effort, "and not only manned lunar landings, but also planets."

He also said he got the definite feeling that they're hard at work right now on large space stations. This is nothing that I was told directly, but my own appraisal of the situation is that you'll probably see an active program with some large launches in the near future."

Borman resigned as an astronaut in May and is now heading a U.S. space agency task group working on development of large American space stations in Earth orbit.

Fire Bombs, Stones

Fighting Marks 'Glorious 12th'

LURGAN, Northern Ireland (AP) — Gasoline bombs and stones were hurled in the streets of Lurgan Saturday as Northern Ireland's Protestants staged their Orange Day march. Six persons, three of them policemen, went to hospital.

Most of Northern Ireland was peaceful as an estimated 100,000 marchers celebrated the "Glorious 12th" but in Londonderry about 150 youths threw up street barricades and skirmished with police Saturday night.

Minor scuffles broke out in Belfast where 35,000 marchers took to the streets, celebrating the 279th anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne, where Protestant King William defeated Roman Catholic King James I. Trouble erupted in Lurgan, 20 miles from Belfast, when Protestants and Roman Catholics clashed over a Union Jack flying from a house.

Police, swinging batons, charged the crowds. Sticks, stones and bottles of gasoline were thrown. One policeman was spat upon with blazing gasoline but escaped unhurt. Five persons were arrested.

Police reported other marches throughout the north were peaceful and uninterrupted. In the Belfast parade, more than 2,000 of the marchers had come from Scotland, the United States, Canada and Australia.

"Before members of the U.S. Congress get too excited by the propaganda of the Irish-American lobby," he said, "let them ask themselves how they would like the spectacle of an Irish Cuba."

He said the Northern Ireland government would not be pushed into an Irish republic by threats from a "lunatic minority."

He gave no specific date for the planned visit to the United States.

Boat Flips, Search Launched

VANCOUVER (CP) — The armed forces Rescue Coordination Centre here said early today a search has been launched for two, or possibly three persons missing after a small speedboat overturned off the west coast of Vancouver Island.

Sketchy details indicated there were nine or 10 persons on the boat when it capsized near Seal Rocks at Long Beach.

A vessel in the area arrived on the scene after a general marine broadcast was issued by the Rescue Coordination Centre and picked up an unknown number of survivors.

Tools Stolen From Prison

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — A thief broke into the Oregon State Penitentiary Annex early Saturday morning and made off with $1,300 worth of tools.

State police said they believed the burglary was the work of an ex-inmate of the minimum security annex.

Kelsey Bay Men On Job Monday

KELSEY BAY — A spokesman for MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. said Saturday the company will reopen its Kelsey Bay logging division on Vancouver Island Monday morning after being shut down since Wednesday.

The company said it was been assured by Local 1-363 of the International Woodworkers of America that its 350 members employed at the division will return to work "in the normal manner" including working overtime as necessary.

MacMillan Bloedel shut down the Kelsey Bay division because of what it called a persistent slowdown which had cut production by 40 per cent.

'No Vote Until U.S. Goes'

TOKYO (UPI) — North Vietnam said today free elections are impossible in South Vietnam so long as U.S. troops are there.

The official North Vietnamese news agency, in a transmission monitored here, said current withdrawal of a portion of U.S. troops from South Vietnam was being done only to placate anti-war feeling in the United States.

The dispatch repeated Hanoi's demand for formation of a coalition government with Viet Cong representatives in Saigon as a preliminary to calling elections. South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu has offered to allow Communist candidates in an election but has rejected their demand that they be taken into the government beforehand.

The men voted Saturday to return to work at what was described as a "boisterous meeting" in Campbell River. The secret ballot vote was passed by a 67-per cent majority.

President of Local 1-363, Max Salter told the Colonist the vote included the condition that the company "would do its best to solve outstanding problems."

He said there were a number of these, including the issue of pay for some union members who had worked the Victoria Day holiday. Mr. Salter said reports of the issue concerning the July 1 holiday were erroneous.

He denied there had been any work slowdown policy, and blamed "damned poor management" by the company for production decreases.

Mr. Salter said some workers who had returned to homes in such places as Victoria might have difficulty in returning to Kelsey Bay by Monday morning. He said he had been assured by the company, however, that

Russia Blames China

Border Talks Broken Off

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union accused China of breaking off talks Saturday aimed at solving shipping problems in the disputed frontier region between the two countries.

"The leader of the Chinese delegation refused to continue the conference," said the official Soviet news agency, Tass, "and made malicious attacks on Soviet representatives."

Tass said the conference by a mixed Soviet-Chinese commission was held at Khabarovsk to settle navigation problems on the Amur, Ussuri, Argun and Sungach rivers and Lake Hanka.

"The commission was to discuss practical questions concerning the creation of normal shipping on the frontier sections of rivers between the Soviet Union and the P.R.C. (Peoples Republic of China)," Tass said.

It said the Chinese delegation tried to discuss a border line on the rivers and wanted to revise a 1951 Soviet-Chinese agreement, while the Russian delegation "was trying to keep the conference from deviating from the discussion of practical matters relating to navigation."

"It was in order to frustrate the conference that the Chinese authorities staged on July 8 an armed attack on Soviet river workers on Goldensky Island," Tass said.

It said the Chinese refusal Saturday to continue the conference was "a new hostile act which is part of the continued provocative actions of the Chinese side."

Soviet Tongue Misses Cheek

MOSCOW (AP) — Radio Moscow said Saturday night the pop music world has gone wild over Russia, and cited the Beatles' hit, Back in the U.S.S.R., to prove it.

In a documentary, Radio Moscow quoted British pop singer Mary Hopkin as saying: "Now everything connected with Russia is fashionable."

A narrator said the Beatles' John Lennon knows what makes a hit, and that because of the Russian trend the Beatles produced their Back in the U.S.S.R. song.

The Beatles recording was then played on the air, probably to the delight of Russian young people who rarely hear Beatles music on Soviet radio stations.

The whole song was played, including a line saying: "I'm back in the U.S.S.R., you don't know how lucky you are."

Candy hTat Dropped on Berlin

Flight Brings Sweet Memories

BERLIN (CP) — Candy dropped in tiny parachutes out of the West Berlin sky Saturday.

The sun broke through just before the "chocolate flies" of 20 years ago dropped his tiny bundles to hundreds of children scrambling on the ground below.

It was a less serious time than the days of the Soviet blockade of the city in 1948-49. Then the Russians put a stop to the candy drops being extended into neighboring East Berlin because the children there had written "Uncle Wiggie Wiggies" that they too liked Americans.

On hand to recreate a poignant moment of history's greatest airlift, that saved Berlin, was Col. Gail S. Halvorsen, a farm boy out of Utah who now commands a satellite tracking unit at Vandenberg Air Force Base in California.

The occasion was an annual Air Force open house at Tempelhof Airfield that this year featured not only American but British and French displays in honor of the joint victory over the blockade two decades ago.

Halvorsen was to make four candy drops during the weekend flying a C-47 Gooney Bird, the Second World War model plane with which the airlift flew its first missions.

As Halvorsen roared over at about 200 feet, crabbing into a gusty wind, West Berlin school children gazed expectantly upward. As the tiny parachutes fluttered to earth with bubble gum, chocolate and other goodies, the kids burst onto the drop field to gather up their spoils.

"Just like in the old days," Halvorsen grinned later.

For a reporter, he recalled what got him into the candy-dropping business. On a Berlin stopover taking movies of other airlift planes coming in, he noticed the generally poor shape of children standing at the end of the runway.

"They did not ask for candy but when I divided two sticks of gum into four pieces, the lucky four acted like kings. There just was no candy or gum to be had in Berlin in those days."

"So, strictly against regulations, I started dropping candy bundles with my own handkerchiefs as I came into Berlin. To signal the kids it was me, I wiggled my wings."

"A newspaperman got wind of the story and saved me from maybe real trouble by giving it a lot of publicity. The next thing you know, I was getting bags of handkerchiefs in the mail because I had run out. And pretty soon people in the States and West Germany were preparing candy bundles and my whole squadron was in the act."

When East Berlin children started writing to him to wiggle his wings and drop them some candy, too, which Halvorsen did, the Russians became furious.

"They complained to the State Department," the veteran pilot recalled, "and the State Department told me to quit."

It was the first time Halvorsen, now 44, had flown a C-47 in a dozen years.

As he roared in for a candy drop pass, a Berliner of about 20 peered into the sky and remarked to himself but aloud:

"Men, those were real times."

Another Juneau In Fleet

BREMERTON, Wash. (AP) — The third U.S. Navy ship to bear the name Juneau was commissioned at the Puget Sound naval shipyard Saturday with Robert Ward, Alaska secretary of state, as principal speaker.

The $25,000,000 amphibious assault ship is the most modern addition to the navy's marine corps fleet. Troops of a battalion can be flown rapidly to combat areas ashore from her helicopter deck.

The first two Juneaus were light cruisers. The original one, named for Alaska's capital, after earning five battle stars went down off Guadalcanal in 1942 when hit by two Japanese torpedoes. Only 10 of her crew survived.

The second Juneau served in the Korean war, earning five battle stars. She was decommissioned in 1956 and her name stricken from the fleet list in 1959.

Vietnam Target Cancelled

Forgotten GI Wants Discharge

PORTERVILLE, Calif. (LAT) — Because he volunteered for Vietnam service, PFC Richard Beatty was sent home from Europe for Christmas leave in 1967.

But through a U.S. army snafu, he has not reached Vietnam and now he hopes he won't have to go.

Much has happened — some good, some not so good — to the soldier the army "forgot" for nearly 18 months.

The handsome, heavily bearded Beatty recalled in his home here recently that he was serving as a reconnaissance scout with the 2nd Armored Cavalry in Germany when an army notice listed reconnaissance scouts among the "critical needs" in Vietnam.

"I wanted to go — and I also hoped I could be home for Christmas, so I volunteered," Beatty, now 21, said. He had a 2-month-old daughter, Dawn, he had never seen, as well as another daughter, Lori, then 3, and his wife, Marjorie, to come back to.

He came home on a 60-day leave Nov. 27, 1967, expecting to receive orders by Jan. 27, 1968, on when to report to Ft. Lewis, Wash.

When the orders did not come he asked the local recruiting officer what to do. "He told me to contact the classification and reassignment section in the Pentagon," Beatty said. "When I called them they told me I'd get a reassignment date in the mail."

But it didn't come. In the meantime, because of his uncertain status, he ran into difficulties trying to get a job and he was not getting his army pay.

The bills piled up. "I owe my dad lots of money — an awful lot," he said.

In desperation, Beatty lied about his service status to get a job at a sawmill.

He went back to high school when he could, hoping to make up enough work to graduate.

When his two-year enlistment ended Feb. 9, without any word from the army, Beatty hired attorney William Hill to help clarify his situation.

Hill appealed to Rep. Robert Mathias (R-Calif.), who learned that the army could not act on Beatty's appeal for a discharge until he reported to Ft. Ord, Calif.

Again he had to drop out of high school and when news stories began to appear about the "forgotten GI," Beatty said he expected to be fired from his job at the sawmill.

After serving 10 days on guard duty there, he was given leaves of 30 days and 20 days twice while the army considered his case.

Two weeks ago the army ruled that he would have to serve another year and ordered him to report to Ft. Ord last Saturday.

He reported but by Monday he was home again, this time on a five-day leave. He sought to investigate the possibility of getting his discharge.

Through attorney Paul Halvorsen of the American Civil Liberties Union, Beatty has obtained a court order prohibiting the army from sending him to Vietnam until a hearing is held July 22.

And if that fails to gain the discharge, Beatty indicated he may seek a hardship discharge.

Mideast Anxiety Rises

U.S. Negotiator Gets to Moscow

By UPI

Joseph Sisco, the United States' top Middle East negotiator, arrived in Moscow Saturday for another U.S.-Russian attempt to find a solution to the Mideast crisis that threatens any day to flare into another all-out war.

As he did, Cairo reported another heavy artillery duel along the Suez Canal near Suez City where the Egyptians Thursday night carried out their most successful commando attack across the waterway since the end of the six-day war in June, 1967.

A Cairo spokesman said Israel started the clash by firing low-range artillery from deep in the Sinai Desert at Suez City. He said Egypt had silenced the fire.

FOUR KILLED

Israel reported a series of Arab commando forays into Israeli farmland Saturday and said four guerrillas were killed in a clash in the Israeli-occupied Golan Heights area of Syria and in the northern Jordan River valley opposite Jordan.

In Amman, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine reported Arab guerrillas blew up a building in an Israeli seaside resort south of Haifa on Saturday, the Israeli embassy, and killed or wounded a number of Israeli holidaymakers.

RESORT SHELLED

The Israelis said Arab guerrillas shelled the popular Israeli picnic spot at Banyas natural springs, four miles south of the Lebanese border in the Golan Heights, and wounded three civilians with flying shrapnel.

A spokesman in Tel Aviv also said an Israeli soldier wounded Thursday night in an Egyptian commando raid died Saturday, bringing the toll to five in what Israel called Egypt's most successful commando attack since the 1967 war.

The fear in Western capitals was that Israel would be goaded into further reprisals against the Arabs, particularly Egypt, and Sisco's mission in Moscow was reported aimed at finding a solution before there is even more serious escalation.

In Damascus, the various Arab commando groups were reported consolidating their operations against Israel in co-operation with the Syrian government.

'Nothing to Say' Widow Replies

SAIGON (UPI) — Anna Chennault, widow of the Second World War Flying Tiger chief, named by author Theodore White as influencing the 1968 presidential elections, said Saturday she had "nothing to say" of the report.

"The public must wait for my book about Vietnam which is coming out soon," said Mrs. Chennault.

SEVERAL FRIENDS

The former Anna Chennault said she was in Saigon visiting friends. However, during this week she told UPI on several occasions she was "attending very important meetings."

In his book, The Making of the President, 1968, White reported that Mrs. Chennault was intimately involved in last year's presidential campaign by strengthening South Vietnamese government resistance to peace talks. Mrs. Chennault was a Republican campaign worker during the election campaign.

American embassy sources said Mrs. Chennault "travelled frequently to and from South Vietnam from the United States but always stayed with Chinese friends and relatives in Saigon."

U.S. Camp Struck By Rockets

SAIGON (UPI) — The U.S. military command reported Saturday that Communist rockets had struck a U.S. 9th Infantry Division base camp 37 miles southwest of Saigon and killed one American soldier and wounded seven who were to have left for the United States today.

The delayed announcement of the Thursday action coincided with announcement that 800 more troops of the 9th Division will be withdrawn from Vietnam today. They will fly from Bien Hoa air force base to McCord air force base, Wash.

Military spokesmen said two Americans were killed and 21 other servicemen and a civilian wounded when a 107-mm. rocket landed near the 9th Infantry Division centre where soldiers are being processed for their return to the United States.

The soldier who was killed and the seven who were wounded were to have left for home. The other soldier killed and the 10 wounded were members of the 3rd Brigade of the 9th which will remain in Vietnam.

Langford Drywall — handed its second straight loss of the Major Men's Softball League season Saturday, edging the Builders, 3-2, at Central Park. Bate's Barry Jackson suffered his first loss in nine decisions this season.

Behind, 1-2, Langford tied it in the sixth inning when Stan Emerick, who had singled, scored on Steve Bishop's triple. Bishop, trying to stretch it into an inside-the-park home run, scored the winning run when Bate's catcher Jim Moody dropped the ball while trying to tag Bishop out.

Four games are scheduled to day at Central Park.

Nanaimo's South End Mt. Benson Legion defeated Victoria All-Stars, 5-3, Saturday in an exhibition juvenile soccer match at Royal Athletic Park before approximately 300 fans.

Both teams are preparing for the August visit of the Manchester United Boy All-Stars.

Roy Clarke opened the scoring, with just one minute gone, from a penalty and Nanaimo was never headed although Victoria came back with goals by Theo Vandenberg and Robert Gutierrez to tie the match after Brian Mayes scored the second Nanaimo goal.

Al Thomson made it 3-2 at the half and boosted the margin to 4-2 midway through the second half before Vandenberg and Richard Fulla traded goals in the late stages.

Popular Tour Veteran Leads Supertest Golf

TORONTO (CP) — Personable Marilyn Smith, a 60-year-old tour veteran, fired a one-under-par 72 Saturday for a two-stroke lead over Sandra Haynie in the second round of the $22,000 Supertest Open Golf Tournament.

Miss Smith said she hit her iron as well as she ever has in her 20-year career in carving a 36-hole total of 144 after a 72 in the opening round.

Miss Haynie, who led the opening round with a 70, ballooned to 76 for 146 because of troubles on the back nine at the tricky 673-yard, par 73 Bayview Golf Club course.

Defending champion Carol Mann, one stroke off the pace going into the second round, four-putted the third hole and also shot 76 for 147 and a tie with 1968 U.S. Open Champion Sue Berning who posted 73.

Beard Charges To Classic Lead

EDINA, Minn. (AP) — Frank Beard charged through sweltering heat to a four-under par 67 Saturday and grabbed a one-stroke lead in the third round of the $100,000 Minnesota Golf Classic.

Beard, a quiet man from Louisville, Ky., had a 54-hole total of 203, 10 under par on the 6913-yard par 71 Braemar Golf Club course.

One stroke back at 204 was his playing partner, second-round leader Dave Stockton, who had a 69.

Hale Irwin, a 24-year-old former University of Colorado football star, held third with a 69 for 205 and was trailed by Tom Shaw and South African Hugh Innes, each at 206.

Britain Celebrates Return of Title As Jacklin Tops International Field

LYTHAM, ST. ANNES, England (UPI) — England's Tony Jacklin, toughened by two years on the American golf circuit, returned the British Open title to his country for the first time in 18 years Saturday when he conquered New Zealand's Bob Charles by two strokes with a 72-hole score of 280.

The 25-year-old Jacklin survived a pressure-packed final round showdown with Charles with a 72 and became the first Englishman since Max Faulkner in 1951 to win Britain's most prized golf title.

Not since England's Roger Banister became the first person to run the mile under four minutes in 1954 did an Englishman create as much excitement as Jacklin did on the final round.

With the partisan crowd screaming with delight every time he hit the ball, Jacklin battled Charles head-to-head down the final 18 holes and refused to buckle under the tremendous pressure.

In fact it was Charles who became the more unnerved on the final holes as he failed to take advantage of bogeys by Jacklin on both the 15th and 17th holes.

U.S. Open queen Donna Caponi soared to 78 for 150 after an opening round 72. The bubbly Californian was tied with Mickey Wright, 74; leading money winner Kathy Whitworth, 76; and winless veteran Sybil Griffin, 74.

LPGA Champion Sandra Post of Oakville, Ont., said the course played "unbelievably tough, especially the greens." Miss Post who shot 77, was grouped at 152 with Jo Ann Prentice, Murie Lindstrom and Shirley Englehorn.

Marlene Stewart Street, who won the Ontario amateur title earlier in the week, repeated Friday's 77 for 154.

Ferraris, 76; Sandra Palmer, 72 and Canadian amateur Pam Miller, a senior language major at the University of Western Ontario, who shot a 76.

TOOK PRESSURE OFF

Coming to the final hole Jacklin, who had a two-stroke lead over Charles and Ireland's Christy O'Connor after 54 holes, was still two strokes ahead of Charles. The left-handed New Zealander then took the pressure off Jacklin when he missed a 15-foot putt for a birdie on the final hole.

Jacklin touched off a deafening standing ovation when he tipped in for a par and with a broad grin on his face tossed his ball dramatically into the crowd.

FORMER WINNERS

Charles, who won the British Open here in 1953, also carded a 72 on the final round for a 282 total while Peter Thomson of Australia, a five-time winner of the event, and Roberto de Vicenzo of Argentina, the 1957 champion, were another stroke back at 283.

O'Connor, who slumped to a 74 was next at 284 followed by Americans Jack Nicklaus and Davis Love at 285. Nicklaus carded a 72 on the final round while Love had a 71.

Jacklin, who picked up a check for $10,000 for his victory, credited his two-year stint on the American PGA circuit for helping his game and enabling him to withstand the pressure.

Seventy-three golfers survived Saturday's cut.

Former Toronto golfer Gary Slater, now playing out of the Bahamas, was alone in fifth place at 142 following a 74 while Stan Homesnik of Des Moines, Man., Bob Cox of Vancouver and amateur Rick Fraser of Regina were tied at 143. All had 72s following opening 71s.

Wayne Vollmer of Vancouver fired his second 73 for a share of 10th place.

Bowlers Gain B.C. Berths

Andy Dickie and John McMillan, Percy Hawes and Jim Pollock, all of the Burnside Lawn Bowling Club, won berths into the provincial men's doubles playdowns in Vancouver on July 25 and 26 with victories Saturday at their home greens.

Dickie and McMillan defeated clubmates Alex Donald and Bill Cruikshank while Hawes and Pollock eliminated Oak Bay's Frank Hilliard and Bill Johnson in the straight knockout tournament.

The Burnside bowlers join John Green of Oak Bay and Colin Fleck of Burnside, who won singles spots June 21, at the provincial championships.

Competition in the rinks division to determine provincial representation will begin Saturday.

"It makes all the struggling over the past couple of years in the United States worthwhile," said the smiling young Englishman as he sipped his celebration glass of champagne.

"At one point when I missed the cut five times in six weeks in American tournaments, I found myself wondering if I was wasting my time. But I know I was just gaining experience necessary to win this championship," he added.

Duncan Controversy

Keep Mound, Cut Trees Compromise Suggested

Photostory by ELIAS MUESTER

DUNCAN — Cowichan Station resident Magnus Colvin, 76, has a special attachment to the controversial treed mound at Duncan and he offers a compromise solution to the mound's fate which he hopes may be acceptable to all concerned.

Mr. Colvin, born in this district, suggests cutting the tall fir trees but leaving the mound a reminder of ancient history.

The mound controversy began when the Cowichan Indian band council announced trees and mound would have to disappear because prospective tenants of the proposed $2,000,000 shopping centre fear the mound would be hazardous to buildings and people and would obscure the view towards the new centre.

Mr. Colvin said, "We should leave it but the heavy timber should be cut. An arboretum could be created on the mound by planting native shrubs and flowers."

"Perhaps on top of the mound a small Indian-type building could serve as a shelter for weary shoppers or people seeking a peaceful moment. It could even be some kind of a tea house although I personally don't like to see that particular spot commercialized."

Mr. Colvin, who was born on a stump farm in this area and who lived most of his life in the district, said the mound has always played an important role in the community's life.

He remembers the trees, now lowering on top of the mound, as being only about the size of a teenage boy.

He said, "At one time there was a bandstand on top and during the fall exhibition people used to watch livestock parades and races from benches at the mound."

Before the white man appeared on Vancouver Island Indians, according to one story used to have a meeting chamber built right into the west side of the mound, Mr. Colvin said.

Mr. Colvin has studied much about the history of American Indians. He said if the mound is not of human construction then its formation would date back to the ice age.

However, Mr. Colvin feels the former is the case and therefore the Duncan mound would be related to similar structures in ancient Mexico and the United States.

Two Killed Near Port Alberni

Tofino Hit and Run Death Brings Road Toll to Three

The death of a 74-year-old hit and run victim in Tofino hospital early Saturday morning brought the traffic death toll for Saturday on the Island to three.

Two Port Alberni men were killed early in the day when the car in which they were riding left the highway and smashed into a tree on Beaver Creek road, about six miles north of Port Alberni.

In the hit and run incident, Harry Charlie of the Opitsate Indian band died in Tofino hospital from injuries received when he was struck by a car which failed to stop on a road near Tofino about midnight Friday.

Mr. Charlie was found lying on the road by an RCMP constable, police said.

Coroner Paul Kimola said an inquest will be held at a date to be set later. Meanwhile, RCMP have launched an investigation.

Mr. Charlie lived at Opitsate with his wife, Emma, an invalid, and a son, Frank.

He is survived by four sons, a daughter and two brothers.

Dead in the Port Alberni accident are Dean Peterson, 21, identified by RCMP as the driver of the car and Martin Moore, 26.

Police said the accident occurred about 12:45 a.m. on a sharp curve about six miles north of Port Alberni.

"That car was just welded around a big tree," an RCMP spokesman said.

He said the wreckage had to be cut apart with acetylene torches so that police could remove the bodies of the victims.

Both men were dead at the scene, the RCMP spokesman said.

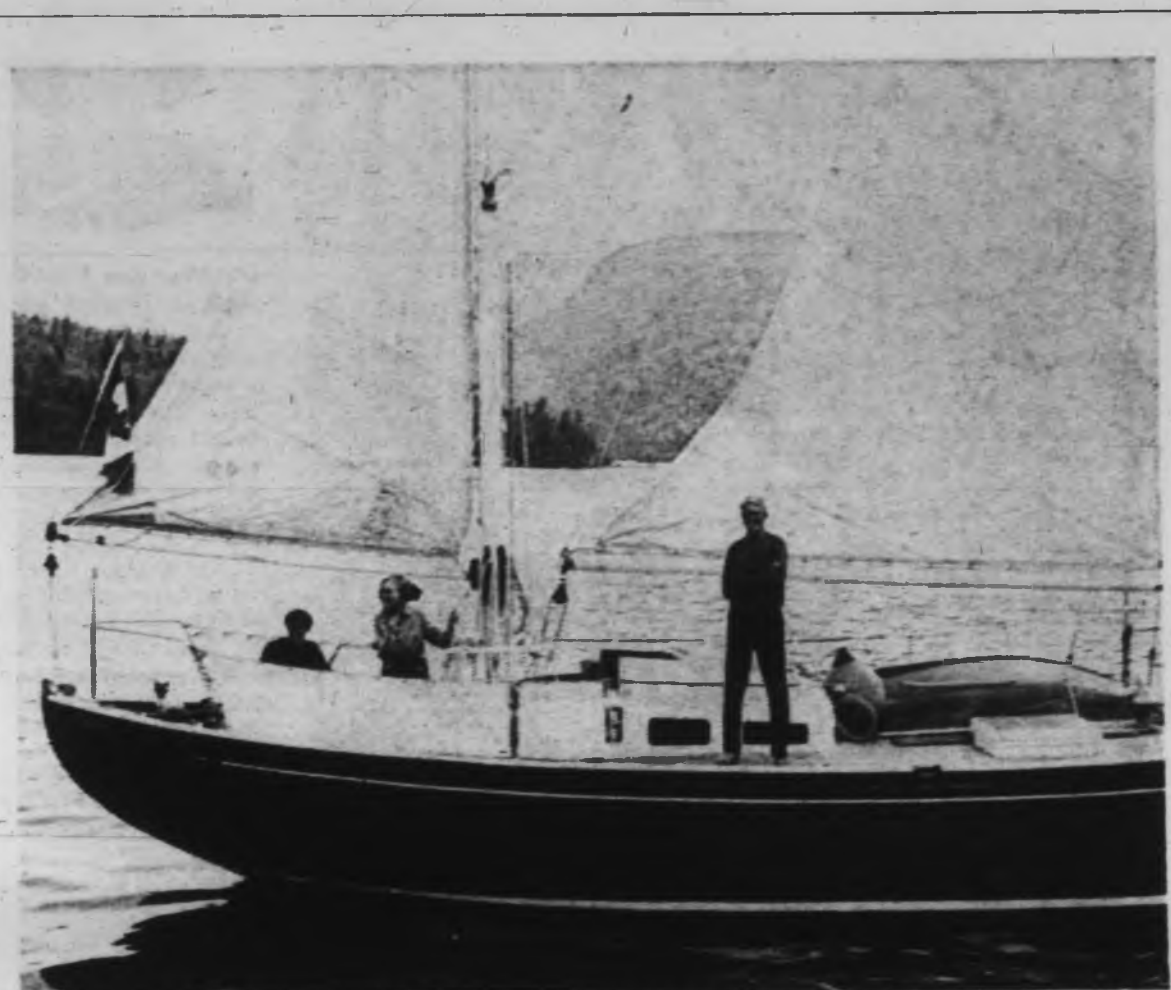

He said the car plunged off the road through a guard rail and knocked down several smaller trees before smashing into the large one.

Coroner Dr. M. V. Norell said there will be an inquest at a date to be set later. He presided over viewing of the bodies Saturday night.

Bathtub Week Queen Picked

NANAIMO — Debbie Corbin, 19-year-old real estate firm secretary, was crowned Saturday night as Mermaid Queen of Nanaimo's third annual Bathtub Race Week.

The crowning took place at the Legion hall. Organizers of the queen contest were the Legion branch.

Miss Corbin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Corbin, 1118 Woodlands, won the title over four other contestants.

They were: Sandy MacMillan, Diana McKay, Gwen Murcheson and Theresa Ryan, who will reign as princesses.

Miss Corbin will preside over festivities of Bathtub Week, starting today, along with King Neptune who will be chosen at the Civic Arena next Friday.

BIGGEST EVER

The crowning of the Mermaid Queen opened what Bathtub Week Society Commodore Les Mottishaw said will be the biggest bathtub week ever.

He said there are more things planned in connection with this year's channel crossing than ever before.

The race itself next Sunday is expected to draw the largest number of entries yet — more than 400 bathtubs, drivers and escort boats.

Thousands of tourists are expected to crowd into the city for the festivities.

Fish Bite For Roberts

CAMPBELL RIVER — Ontario's Premier John Roberts and his son, Timothy, sampled Island outdoor life to the hilt during a six-day stay at Painter's Lodge last week.

Manager Corky Corbett said Saturday The Roberts and two other men he said were friends of the Roberts caught 200 pounds of salmon during their stay which ended Saturday.

"Most of the fish were springs," Mr. Corbett said, "but on Friday, the party caught three coho, which really made the fishing a success."

Community Works For Boat Ramp

CAMPBELL RIVER — Already this year many tourists and residents have made good use of the public boat ramp being constructed by the Campbell River Wildlife Association on Campbell River Spit.

The project represents more than a year of work by the association, aided by volunteer labor and donations of equipment and materials from local business and industry.

During the past year the association has raised $4,000 from donations which has been spent on materials such as concrete, reinforcing, blacktopping, renting of some equipment and wages.

Most of the materials were supplied by local firms at rock-bottom prices. And use of most of the equipment has been donated.

Most of the work is done on weekends when fishing enthusiasts and other public-spirited citizens have time from their regular jobs to devote to building the ramp. This includes the members of the Wildlife Association whose committee is comprised of Carl Palmblad, Bill Davis and George Bergsma.

Already completed and in constant use are five concrete bays on the ramp each 13 feet wide. This is located on public access land on the waterfront on the Spit.

Under construction is a large tract of foreshore alongside the ramp, which the municipality has leased from Elk River Timber Company, which is being made into a parking lot estimated to hold 100 cars and their boat trailers.

When the parking lot is completed and put into use, it will relieve congestion along the Spit Road caused by cars and boat trailers.

Tanned Muscles at All Sooke Day

Grunting Loggers Sensitive Up Close

By DON COLLINS

At a distance, they looked the part.

Tanned muscles danced in the sunlight as axe blades bit deeply into the wood.

The men grunted and perspired, and against the backdrop of tall evergreens they demonstrated the very special skills that belong only to these loggers competing for various championships at All Sooke Day.

Up close, and on an individual basis, the picture was somewhat different.

There was Earl Marcelus, a 25-year-old scholar who wants to be a university professor; an eastern lumberjack among western loggers.

Larry Downing, 34, of Castle Rock, Wash., soft-spoken and polite, stood up well under the confusion of an afternoon that saw both good and bad drop from on high for him.

His own mighty descent after climbing quickly to the top of a 100-foot pole helped win him the main event of the day.

The other descent by sky-diver Al Elmer, 28, of Victoria, ripped an aerial from the parked Downing car and put a dent in the hood. Al, who has been sky diving six years, escaped injury.

"My main concern was that no one was hurt," said Mr. Downing.

Added to this was the straightforward manner of Brian Herlihy, who showed his usual concern for other loggers after being named best all-round logger for the third consecutive year.

Brian, a 30-year-old father of two, has been winning with monotonous regularity since moving to Sooke three years ago from New Zealand.

He has had claims to various world logging titles, as have Clayton Stewart and Cole Schaffaris, the two Australians who tied in second place, two points behind the leader.

The crowd that turned out for the competitions and other attractions of All Sooke Day was estimated at close to 12,000, a record gathering for an event that began in 1934.

It was a hungry crowd that ate a ton of barbecued salmon, almost as much barbecued beef, countless hotdogs and a "sea" of clam chowder.

The slight possibility of bad weather gave way to brilliant sunshine by the time the program began, adding to what has been described as the dry miracle of All Sooke Day. The event has never been marred by rain.

In topping all other competitors (there were 40 from B.C., Washington, Oregon, New York State and Australia) Brian Herlihy placed first in two chopping events, standing block and hard hitting, second in the underhand chop, third in the springboard chop and fourth in the peavey log roll.

Brian's chief concern in an interview afterward was the fact Canada might not be able to send a six-man team of loggers to Australia for a centennial logging meet there next January.

So far, no one has come forward to finance such a trip, something he says would cost $10,000.

"It will be a shame if the country can't be represented," he said. "It might be a good time for me to point out that 35 cents of every dollar earned in B.C. is earned by the forest industry."

Earl Marcelus, the young scholar from Schaghticoke, N.Y., has already been chosen as one of the six-man U.S. team for the Australian meet.

Earl is a third-generation logger (he uses the eastern term, lumberjack) and is a graduate forestry student at the University of Washington in Seattle.

He was first in log-bucking and second in the springboard chop in the novice division.

"I have to practice for these things a lot because I am so small in comparison to some of these monsters," he said. He weighs 175 pounds and stands five-feet-ten-inches.

His immediate goal is more competition ("The biggest feather in my cap is being selected for the U.S. team") but for the future he wants his doctorate and a job teaching on a university level.

Another native easterner on hand was Lieutenant-Governor John Nicholson, who came to B.C. 46 years ago.

In officially opening the program, Lieutenant-Governor Nicholson said the trees of his native New Brunswick "fade into insignificance" when compared with the trees of B.C.

Larry Downing's victory in the record climbing was speeded in 37.5 seconds. His brother, Ron, was second.

Truck Rolls Over

LAKE COWICHAN — Ron South Shore road, west of Lake Mason, 43, of Honeymoon Bay Cowichan, came across railway track and at a slight curve in the road, left the highway, slid sideways and rolled over. Lake Cowichan RCMP said the truck was travelling along at 33,000.

Bundles of supplies dropped at Tofino airstrip

Troops Prove Nimbleness

TOFINO — The air mobility of the Canadian Forces in a tactical support role was demonstrated during exercise On Guard held early this month. The 500 troops involved in the simulated defence of Comox operation made use of the air capability of four different squadrons, all based in Edmonton.

Over 350 paratroopers of the Canadian Airborne Regiment were airlifted from their Edmonton base to Vancouver Island in eight flights of the turbo-prop Hercules aircraft of 435 Squadron.

COMOX BASE

The men and their equipment landed at Canadian Forces Base Comox on the east coast of Vancouver Island and were then carried by Buffalo aircraft of 429 Squadron to the forward airhead at the wartime airstrip at Tofino.

Flying through deteriorating weather conditions the Voyageur helicopter pilots of 450 "edison" Transport Squadron played the role of both friendly and enemy forces as they provided the airlift from the airhead to the forward positions.

When the aerial reconnaissance carried out by the air reserve pilots of 418 City of Edmonton Squadron located the "enemy" force of the 22 Special Air Services regiment of the British army on the off shore Meares Island paratroopers were lifted by helicopter into the search and destroy portion of the exercise.

HEAVILY TIMBERED

Moving through the heavily timbered area was, according to the jungle-experienced SAS troops, "like nothing we trained in anywhere in the world." In these conditions the troops relied on the old infantryman's "shank's mare" as they searched across the island for the ever-elusive "guerrillas."

Supplies of rations and equipment were parachuted to the "forces" as the paratroopers fanned out across the area, searching for the enemy in the densely wooded island. All supplies were delivered to the ground forces either by airlanding or by paratroop.

The exercise was planned to involve all elements of the forces and paratroopers made use of all methods of transportation. The aerial eyes of the reserve squadron reported the enemy had moved to the opposite coast at Texada Island and the navy played their part as the airborne became seaborne in a pre-dawn attack on the island.

HISSING DOWN POUR

Three naval auxiliary craft each carrying over 50 paratroopers sailed from Comox to the "captured" island arriving in a hissing downpour as the paratroopers inflated their rubber assault boats and roared ashore.

Although hampered by the driving rain throughout the operation the paratroopers secured the small airstrip from the SAS. The return trip to the airhead was less strenuous as the two para companies were airlifted from Texada Island by Buffaloes, Otters and Voyageur helicopters.

Throughout the exercise the aircraft were under the operational control of the Tactical Air Control Center commanded by the air commander Major L. Benson of Victoria, commanding officer 429 Buffalo Squadron. The aircraft were tasked at the request of the ground commanders and the exercise directed by Col. D. H. Rochester commander of the Canadian Airborne Regiment.

As the ground exercise ended the paratroopers were airlifted from the forward areas by the tactical support aircraft to the Comox airbase to board the 435 Squadron airtrucks, and return to home base at Edmonton.

THE RHYTHM GROUP—The Save The Children Fund's Rooftop School at Hong Kong.

By VIVIANNE CHADWICK

An unusual name, Eglantyne. I don't think I've ever heard it before . . .

And yet, when I first read of Eglantyne Jebb and her inspired work, there floated somewhere in my consciousness the thought that this was a flower of some kind.

Sure enough, my trusty encyclopedia informs me that "eglantyne is the name sometimes given to the sweet briar rose."

Today, countless thousands who owe their very existence to the Save The Children Fund, have reason to know the name Eglantyne and call it blessed.

Eglantyne Jebb. Do you have a mental picture of a thin, rather dowdy spinster with carelessly done hair, too immersed in missionary work to care about anything else? You couldn't be more wrong. Her photograph in the little SCF booklet shows a strikingly attractive young woman, with dark bright eyes, finely chiselled, sensitive mouth, and a wealth of copper-colored hair. She was born in an English manor house, and attended the first of the women's colleges at Oxford. It was through her work as a teacher to the children of the poor that she first became aware of the urgent need for social reforms on their behalf.

The year 1913, the end of the Balkan War, and later on the 1914-1918 holocaust, left such wide-spread suffering behind that Miss Jebb, together with a sister, Mrs. Dorothy Buxton, organized a Fight the Famine Council, which recently resulted in the formation of the Save the Children Fund.

In this cause Miss Jebb gave her life. Worn out, says her biography, with years of overwork and strain, she died at the comparatively early age of 52. But the organization for which she was responsible has grown, expanded, and spread throughout the world, its patron Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth.

The quarterly reports from field committees everywhere make fascinating and deeply moving reading. In the main, the work is the same, no matter the difference in geography — medicines, clothing, food, shelter dispensed. It's the details that bring home the brutal need.

From Kenya, for instance. Here one of the outstanding problems is the vast numbers of destitute, abandoned, and vagrant boys, from the age of seven up, who run wild, begging, stealing, and scouring the refuse bins for food, on the streets of Nairobi. In one year more than 11,000 of these children were helped, treated, or provided with homes by the Fund.

A report from Quinhon, Vietnam, gives some individual case histories. Here is the story of Lu, aged 12, a street urchin who "lived on the steps of the local cinema." He was rescued, fed, clothed, and given surgery for a deformed leg. For some months he seemed contented with life at the Centre, and was wonderful with the smaller kids. But Lu had a problem of his own. He had learned to like strong liquor. Came the time when he disappeared for several days — and returned very drunk indeed! Now, says this latest report, Lu has gone again and no one knows where he is. But the Centre staff is hopeful that he will come back, and perhaps, this time, he will stay!

Case history No. 263, Phan Tam, aged 14, describes another type of tragedy. One day, while the boy was travelling in an uncle's ancient truck, the radiator ran dry. A common occurrence, Phan Tam made several trips to a nearby well for water, and on the last one stepped on a mine planted by the side of the road and forgotten. Another common occurrence. The child was lucky. He merely lost one leg below the knee. Not too bad, he feels, when he looks about him at certain other little ones at the Centre, half his age, who have been left with no legs at all.

Again, in a report from Northern India are tales of the little Tibetan refugees. Here is a picture of a smiling four-year-old in the arms of a SCF nurse. He was found sitting in a tent beside the dead body of his mother, himself almost gone from malnutrition. He was brought back to health and is now fat and well-clothed . . . the only evidence of his narrow escape from a death too close to his birth, the flattened tip of a nose chewed away by rats, as starved as he, in the derelict tent.

In many cases the establishment of these Children's Fund Centres for the young casualties of war, famine, and disaster, have been brought about in the face of quite fantastic difficulties. Here at home we obtain water at the turn of a tap, and light and power with the pressure of a switch. Things aren't quite like that in many distant, more primitive lands.

However, a late report from Quinhon is radiant. Through an arrangement with some ships off-shore belonging to a private American company, heavy voltage electricity has been brought in! Instead of the "spasmodic luxury of occasional lights, fans, and ice" from inadequate sources, these vital items are now available 24 hours a day. No more dependence on old and defective paraffin equipment. In an infirmary, this must almost make the difference between life and death.

Nevertheless, it's still not all roses at Quinhon. There's no mess hall, playground, or occupational therapy room as yet, even though in winter it's too wet outside, and in summer too hot. Also, the one washhouse is still just basins and bits of tin nailed together.

Money and trained workers are the constant need.

The British Columbia branch of the SCF carries a notable responsibility. In addition to contributing financial support in disaster areas, it

Victoria Lawn Bowling Steeped in History

By KEVAN HULL

Victoria Lawn Bowling Club at Beacon Hill Park celebrated its diamond anniversary recently and that means "it has covered about 10 per cent of the game's history," according to club vice-president Tom McKeachie.

"The game is about 600 years old and the club was opened for play June 14, 1909," said Mr. McKeachie, whose first contact with the sport came through his parents, both presidents of their respective divisions at one time, who took him along in a baby carriage in 1918.

An outstanding athlete, Mr. McKeachie played rugby, lacrosse, Canadian football, baseball, soccer and until suffering a heart attack a few years ago, was one of the top cricketers in the city.

"It's a very challenging game," said Mr. McKeachie, who played one year in 1946 and has bowled full time for the past two years.

"It's very similar to curling with the exception that instead of trying to get as many stones as close to the set "button" in curling, every end is played to a different length with the jack rolled down the rink," he said.

The jack is a small hard plastic ball, about the same size as a lacrosse ball.

The winner of the toss at the beginning of the game and the winner of the preceding end after it starts rolls the jack down the rink, which is kept as carefully as a green on a golf course, to the desired length.

"If your opponent is having difficulty with the weight of his bowl on shorter shots, then you would roll the jack short and vice versa," explained Mr. McKeachie.

The bowl is roughly the same size as a fivespin ball, but has a bias on one side so that the ball can be turned either to the left or right depending on the way the bowler directs the smaller circumference. A straight ball is impossible for any great distance down the flat green.

"It works on the principle of a cone," said Mr. McKeachie as he demonstrated both forehand (to hook the bowl to the left) and backhand (to the right) deliveries on the bottom of the club's two 126-foot square greens.

"The average bowler can turn the bowl about five feet over the length of the rink."

The terms are basically the same as in curling. The green, like the ice, is rated keen or heavy. A player tries to draw to, knock out or wick off a bowl to get a count.

Whereas, in curling players try to build a house, the term in bowling is to build a head, but in both instances, the object is to build as large a score as possible by having several of your bowls or rocks nearer the jack or button than the first one of your opponent.

When he has the shot bowl (closest to the jack), the player will try to guard it, only unlike curling, the opponent can knock the jack to the back of the head toward his own bowls and gain a count in that manner. A button is stationary.

For each end (an average game is 18 ends and takes two hours) singles and doubles players have four bowls each. In triples matches there are three bowls each and in rinks (four players), two each.

It is not an expensive game. A new set of bowls costs roughly $45 and should last a lifetime. The average membership fee in Victoria is $25 or less a year and there are no initiation fees.

The Beacon Hill club can accommodate 128 people at one time in rink competition, more than half its 220 membership which is the largest among the seven clubs comprising the VLB.

SOUTH PACIFIC ISLAND HOPPING

The Tahiti of the jet age is still the Tahiti of bygone days, but more people are now able to share in the idyllic life of these South Sea Islanders.

For the visitor who wanders down the streets of Papeete, capital city of Tahiti, for the first time, business, time, news and telephone are still a part of his everyday life.

But the smiling Tahitian with his hat of plaited leaves stepping from his boat, or the vahine in her gaily-colored dress, her long hair ruffled by the breeze and crowned by scarlet hibiscus flower, do not give a thought to these worldly things. Very quickly the newcomer realizes he is in a different world.

Soon dressed like his hosts in a pareu, a crown of flowers on his head, he learns to enjoy the present to the full and to relax in the gentle breeze beside a still lagoon.

The Island of Tahiti, which is the first stop in French Polynesia for visitors arriving by jet, offers sightseeing, shopping, night-clubbing, fine hotels, Tahitian dancing and enough variation to make a perfect South Sea Island holiday without ever leaving this beautiful spot.

But to find the ideal South Pacific life, with the tempo slowed down to that comfortable pace you will never want to give up, you should visit some of the other islands of French Polynesia.

Island hopping is easy to the better known islands, by aircraft or boat.

To more isolated tropical islands you may go on the Canoe Cove Maeva III, chartered through Sealark in Tahiti with Roger Lemerle and John Gourme at $190 a day for six persons, live on board and enjoy South Sea Island lagoons all to yourself.

Ideal setup would be to make Maeva Hotel in Papeete your base headquarters and take side trips from there touring the Island of Tahiti by day, enjoying the night life by evening, and taking overnight trips to Moorea, Bora Bora and Raiatea, staying at the Tahitian style bungalow hotels and enjoying a South Sea Island existence.

I found these South Sea Island resorts operated much like British Columbia Cariboo dude ranches, with the Tahitian way of life brought right to your doorstep.

Each is located beside a crystal clear lagoon sheltered by a coral barrier reef. Each offers outrigger canoe trips, snorkelling, underwater diving, coral garden exploration trips, deepsea fishing, sightseeing, basking on coral sand beaches under cool coconut palms, open-air tropical bars, Tahitian dancing and feasts, French, Tahitian and western cuisine.

One way air tickets from Papeete to Huahine cost $11.70 American, to Raiatea $15.00, to Bora of the Keke, much as our swallows fly across the water looking for flies.

We cruised just on the outside of the reef around Moorea until we came to the opening which leads into the lagoon, near the Ball Hall Hotel, with its fare-type Tahitian bungalows sitting out over the water and white sands of beautiful Marahoua Beach.

When you land on Moorea you truly know you are on a South Pacific Island. Tahiti is beautiful, but it is a bustling island, the business centre of French Polynesia's 110 islands of volcanic and coral origin.

Moorea is different. A place where time seems to stop as you take in the fantastic silhouettes of the needle-like lava mountain peaks, the coconut palms swaying over crystal clear calm lagoons, relax at the Ball Hall open-air beachside bar and sip a Bloody Mary, which seems to be the preferred drink of the islands, or a glass of fruit juice.

The 4,000 inhabitants of Moorea, only about 20 of whom are European, are farmers — copra, vanilla beans, coffee, and chickens — and they work their farms right into the centre of the island, into the mountain valleys of the 50 square mile island where Tahitian kings used to come for solitude.

Ours was a whirlwind visit . . . off the boat, into bathing suits, up to the bar, half the party aboard the bus for a tour by road, the other half on the Iaki Tiki, a big catamaran sailcraft, for a lagoon cruise, music, snorkelling, and diving for shells, back at noon, to the bar, to the Tahitian resort-style open-sided beach-side dining room for a Tahitian shish-kebob dinner, then back to the second half of the sightseeing tour.

This is a schedule you should really allow three or four days to enjoy to the fullest.

The last tour was fascinating, featured by beautiful tropical flowers along the entire route, visits to the studios of artists Martin Roger and Aad Van Der Heyde, who came to the South Pacific, lived it, and stayed to paint Tahitian scenes and island people, continuous drives through coconut plantations where coconuts are gathered every three months to be cut and dried as copra.

Moorea is 12 miles northwest of Papeete and may be reached by a 30-minute crossing by regular boat service or a 10-minute crossing by air.

I saw Moorea all three ways. We first went there on the plush charter vessel the Keke II, and we flew back in an Otter. Then I toured completely around the island with John Gourme and Roger Lemerle in Capt. Gourme's Bertram.

From my hotel I looked out on the cloud-shrouded volcanic peaks of Moorea and looked forward to my visit, but I really wasn't prepared for anything quite so beautiful and enchanting.

We had no sooner got beyond the coral reef which circles Tahiti than I saw my first flying fish flitting across the water, away from the bow grocery store where pareo cloth could be made into dresses or shirts right on the spot, for 500 to 800 francs (87 to U.S. $1), with a beachside beer house next door. The lagoon, Cook, or Pao Pao Bay, is simply fabulous, with its view of Mt. Tahiava towering above it. We stopped at a beautiful little sandy beach where we talked with eight-year-old Wendy Autenroth of Pittsburgh, who had sailed to the South Seas with her parents on their sailing yacht La Salle, which was anchored in the lagoon.

We stopped at a copra drying shed, went for a swim, collected paua shells from the beach, and made a bar and snack stop at the Tahitian-style Almo Hotel with its fare bungakawa and open air grass-ruffed cocktail bar and dining room, where on our second tour (around the island by water) we stopped for a five course dinner, including French wines, mahi mahi and chops.

A British sailing yacht from the Thames was anchored in the quiet lagoon of Cook Bay, in front of the Almo Hotel.

In the afternoon we took the Liki Tiki cruise in the azure blue lagoon where we swam from the boat and experienced our first tropical rainstorm, which lasted only a few minutes and really didn't dampen any of the fun.

On Moorea you can take glass-bottomed boat cruises over the coral gardens, outrigger canoe trips to the barrier reef and just plain loaf on the sandy beaches under the tropical sun.

It is delightful and first class bungalow accommodation is available at either the Ball Hal or the Almo for $30 to $40 a day for two persons, including meals. Other excursions and activities are extra, but relatively inexpensive. Drinks are 80 to 90 francs for beer and about 100 francs for cocktails.

Both hotels offer traditional Tahitian feasts and folk dancing.

In January the new Moorea Lido Hotel is scheduled to open with 180 units at similar rates.

Moorea is also the South Pacific headquarters of the Club Mediterranee.

On our island cruise with John Gourme we stopped in at the village of Mahatea and collected fish which Tahitian reef fishermen had netted for the market in Papeete . . . and what a beautiful site they made in a myriad of tropical colors, pinks, yellows, blues, fluorescent shades, greens, you name it, all small and all beautiful.

We visited Raiatea and Bora Bora by RAI Airlines IXM.

Raiatea is 100 miles northwest and a one hour flight from Papeete. It is second only to Tahiti in size and is one of the unspoiled beauty spots of French Polynesia. We made only a 10-minute stop at the new airstrip, time for a Blushy Mary at the adjacent bar, picture taking for me. These frequent bar stops were a great temptation to one who has fairly recently taken the pledge under doctor's orders, but the whole South Sea Island area is so irresistible in other ways and so socially magnificent that passing up the numerous bar stops wasn't too much of a hardship.

Tourists knew little about Raiatea until recently when an airstrip was opened and three Americans revitalized the island's resort hotel and gave it a new name, Ball Hal Raiatea.

Uturoa on Raiatea is second largest city in French Polynesia with 1,500 population and a two-block shopping area where prices are lower than elsewhere in the French islands. River-motu, about four miles from the Ball Hal is the original home of the New Zealand Maori. Tahaa, the neighboring island, 20 minutes by boat in the same lagoon, features a small 25-person Club Mediterranee annex village.

Only 12 miles, 10 minutes by air from Raiatea, is the smaller but most exciting island of Bora Bora, with its jade green lagoon from which legends tell, came the founders of the Hawaiian race.

Boats connect at the Bora Bora airstrip to take tourists to the Bora Bora Hotel and Club Mediterranee's Noa Noa annex.

We took the boat for delightful cruise to the Bora Bora Hotel.

Bora Bora just has to be the most, but then everything about the South Seas seems to be so excitingly different that it seems impossible to say one place is better than the other. Each place is enchanting and you should see as many as you can.

Huge sea turtles swam in an enclosed pool beside the Bora Bora Hotel wharf. The color of the lagoon was so spectacular it was almost out of this world. Mattress-type boats with circular plexi-glass peer holes in them made floating over the coral gardens a delight. The white sand beach was excellent for swimming. Bungakawa fares reach out into the water. There is an excellent gift shop and the cocktail bar and large dining room, complete with Tahitian band, is a traditional Tahitian open-air fare, overlooking the beach and lagoon with all its seashore fun.

Our first stop was the change houses and into bathing suit. Then to the gift shop where I bought a pareo, which I have already had the nerve to wear on Gordon Bench at Sooke, in sunshine which was just as hot as it was in Tahiti.

Lunch at Hotel Bora Bora was something special . . . chilled island lobster, Tahitian marinated fish in coconut cream, broiled sirloin steak, tossed green salad, assorted French cheeses and fresh island fruit cup.

Then it was off for one of the big highlights of the trip . . . a cruise to the coral reefs with Erwin Christian of Moana Adventure Tours.

Erwin quit ship in Tahiti five years ago and never left these islands of Paradise. Now he operates the glumbat and barrier reef tour from Bora Bora.

Nearly everybody that visits the South Seas gets the urge to stay. As a matter of fact when our party boarded the return UTA jet at FAAA one of the party was missing. He had gone back to Bora Bora and hadn't returned to catch the aircraft. It was a mighty disturbed wife who met the jet at Los Angeles airport and found no husband on board.

The coral reef trip is a must. These beautiful coral gardens must really be seen to be appreciated and Erwin makes the show by diving under the last and feeding the multi-colored tropical fish.

The glass-bottom boat cruise costs 350 francs, a barrier reef visit 400 francs and a Robinson Crusoe Day on your own tropical island 500 francs. Tahitian Taniaras (feasts) and tamures (folk dances) are held at Hotel Bora Bora each week.

Rates are $40 single and $55 double, including meals.

Highlights of a three-hour trip around Bora Bora by bus from the hotel is a stop to see a stone fishing drive, in which an entire village participated.

During the last war Bora Bora was a large American air base, but no trace of the occupation is seen today.

Bora Bora is a paradise for skin divers and it is here where the giant rays (fal) may be found.

Tahiti itself is fascinating and best introduction to the South Seas is by a 100-mile circle tour of the island of Tahiti.

Pretty Tahitian Namure Nordman took me on a personally-conducted island tour only a couple of hours after I arrived in Tahiti and it was a treat to see the island with a Tahitian, rather than on a tourist trip. We visited Tahitian homes, chatted with the people of Tahiti, most of whom speak a little English. All of them are deeply wrapped up in the history of their islands.

"Tahiti is changing. With a small island we can not do big things. We have to work with tourists."

"I love Tahiti, but I don't want to be here all my life. It is too small. It is like a garden. You see the same people all the time." Namure confided. Since jets arrived in Tahiti she has seen much of the world . . . Paris, New York, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Lake Tahoe and she plans a visit to Victoria. Two of her sisters are stewardesses with UTA French Airlines, one, Hinano, was on our flight.

"Two or three years ago you could drive along here and see only two or three cars," she said. Tahiti roads are now plugged with speeding cars and motor scooters, and the numerous youngsters seem to know they must keep out of the way.

The island tour is beautiful and you see the real Tahitian life as well as museums, blow holes, waterfalls, coral reefs, reef fishermen, parks, hundreds of chickens, some cattle, and scores of villages. Some of the Tahitian homes are luxurious, comparable to some of our better summer home subdivisions. The road skirts the seashore for the whole circumference of the tennis-racket-shaped island.

One of the highlights of our stay on Tahiti was a Taniara (feast of pig, Tahitian poi which is different to Hawaiian poi, and other Tahitian foods cooked in an underground oven and removed with much pomp and fanfare to the music of Tahitian drums) and a tamure (hula-type folk dancing) at which I was picked to dance with one of the lovely Tahitian wigglers . . . cold sober and in front of about 300 guests. This big event was specially staged for us and was held at the Moana Nui, a Tahitian-style hotel which has been recently taken over as an annex by the Maeva Hotel.

The biggest treat of all was to attend the Ball of Mohe (fern plant), a charity ball held at the Matua Hotel and attended almost exclusively by residents of Tahiti. Old-time Tahitian folk dancing for Tahitians was featured at this ball and a big thrill was that Namure's aunt (Namure One) was the star of the show. It was a really grand affair with most of the Tahitians attending in traditional costume evening gowns. In our party were Namure, Delphine Ross, Roger Lemerle, senior Take limitless quantities of hard work and determination, sprinkle generously with patience, add a touch of imagination, a dash of raw courage, stir well — and you have the recipe for earning a living in Victoria a century ago.

Hours of nine to five, coffeebreaks, pension funds and so much that we take for granted were not even dreamed of in "the good old days."

Take the case of Thomas Tugwell, pioneer, as an illustration of what it involved to survive and prosper. Like most settlers in the new world, Tugwell was an apprentice in the hard, sometimes brutal, classroom of experience.

Not that this uncompromising teacher is completely without compensation. For example, after a lifetime of struggle, you can always look back with pride and say there had never been a dull moment.

Tom Tugwell knew this. Of all the situations he had encountered in 50 years on Vancouver Island, there had been one glaring omission: boredom!

His first view of Fort Victoria, then little more than a shantytown with stockade, had been from the decks of Her Majesty's Frigate Calypso in 1858, as she nudged alongside the dock at the foot of what is now Fort Street after a lengthy voyage round the Horn.

Discharge papers in hand, the 18-year-old youth strode ashore to embark on the adventure that was to last half a century.

His first job was, to use modern parlance, a hulu—census taker for the Island's west coast. It sounds straightforward enough today, but it should be borne in mind that, back then, the west coast population was comprised mostly of Indians, not a few of whom could be expected to voice objection to having their census taken.

In fact, if they confined themselves to vocal criticism, Mr. Tugwell could consider himself extraordinarily fortunate.

Undaunted by these exciting prospects, Tugwell had begun his job. Some years before his death in 1907, he briefly recounted how he had conducted his survey. Regrettably, he said not a word as to how the campaign had been met by the natives, particularly the fierce Nootkas. We can only conclude they liked the daring young Englishman.

"The method employed," he told The Colonist, "was to obtain from each Indian family or tribe as many chips of wood as there were adults in family or tribe and smaller chips to represent children, while still other chips were used to represent the fighting men of each tribe . . . Each tribe numbered on an average 800 souls."

And that was that.

There is some confusion among existing records at this point as to the order of events in Tugwell's career. According to the early Colonist biography, quoted above he "then engaged in surveying the coasts of the Island" aboard HMS Hecate, "encountering many hardships and . . . many thrilling experiences with the then Indian tribes."

In 1861, this account continues, Tugwell returned to the Old Country via San Francisco, Honolulu, Fanning Island, Samoa, Fiji, Sydney, New South Wales, Brisbane, Queensland and Java. Four years later, he was back in Victoria to try his luck at trading.

A family biography states Tugwell first arrived in Victoria as steward aboard HMS Plumper, serving aboard this vessel and HMS Hecate under Captains Richards and Pender during their lengthy surveys of the coast. Tugwell Island in the Queen Charlottes was named after him while in this service. He then sailed for England for his discharge, returning to the colony to try trading.

On the next exciting chapter of his career, both records coincide for the most part. Whichever is the more accurate, Tugwell had quite a time of it.

To again quote The Colonist, Tugwell had proceeded to Barkley Sound with a large stock of goods. "Wanting lumber for the building of a store, he set out with two canoes and eight Indians to go to a mill then standing at New Alberni, in charge of a Mr. Taylor.

"On the way up their food ran short, and, encountering an old Indian fishing, Chief Imp Jaack, who was one of the eight Indians accompanying Mr. Tugwell, declared he would kill him for his fish. They rowed up to the old Indian.

Tom Tugwell's Otter Point Back at Sooke.

TOM TUGWELL DEFIED DEATH

"Imp Jaack caught the fisherman by the hair and was about to slay him, when Mr. Tugwell threw his revolver at the chief's feet and commanded the chief to shoot him first. This daring act so startled the murderous chief that he desisted, murdering neither. Mr. Tugwell then traded tobacco for the old man's fish."

The family record links Tugwell's name with that of the legendary Nootka, Chief Maquinna, maintaining Maquinna seized the trader's sloop and stuck and imprisoned him "I don't know how long."

Tugwell had escaped by winning the savage chief's confidence. So much so that Maquinna finally consented to let him go fishing with one of the village youths. Once out of sight of the village, Tugwell had overpowered his companion, raised sail and fled to Neah Bay where he obtained employment at a government experimental farm, sending the boy on to Victoria.

His trading venture had been a disaster. The Colonist agreed, but under different circumstances. After the dramatic incident with the old fisherman, Tugwell had purchased his lumber at Alberni and begun the return voyage to the site he had chosen to erect his store. Encountering rough weather, the expedition was "compelled to anchor at Uchuulmet, now a fishing station, whence Mr. Tugwell walked overland with Indian pilots to Mithsalt. With his lumber, that was brought around by his Indian crew, he built a store and installed his goods."

"About this time the Indians gave a potlatch and for gifts to visiting tribes took his entire stock and distributed it, refusing to pay for anything they took."

Thus ended his short-lived trading venture. Perennially, Tugwell had paddled to Neah Bay and accepted a job at the experimental station for $80 in gold a month.

It would have been during this period he experienced his most harrowing encounter with Indians. One day, while rowing from Neah Bay to Totem Lighthouse on an unrelated errand, he fell asleep at the oars, not awakening until dawn—to find his tiny craft surrounded by menacing natives.

"There seemed but little hope of escaping, and as to him death seemed inevitable, he handed his revolver to a chief and asked him to kill him with that if he intended to kill him at all. The heroism of the act saved his life. The Indian returned him his weapon and permitted him to go free."

It is interesting to speculate as to whether Tugwell had meant his gesture as such or hoped by extreme good fortune to escape by using the same dramatic device he had employed with Chief Imp Jaack in Barkley Sound.

Whatever, when finally he reached the safety of the lighthouse, "he was exhausted from exposure, fright and hunger, and lay for days ere he recovered."

Never one to say die, when next we hear of Tugwell, he has purchased the Bush Tavern in Esquimalt Town from John Tilsman, in February of 1867. Like all his chosen occupations, hotel-keeping was to have its moments too.

Like a month later when Tugwell, "a respectable looking man," was fined $200 for selling whisky to Indians. Despite vehement denials by Mrs. Tugwell and their bartender that he was working in the garden at the time of the alleged transaction, Officers McMillan and Taylor swore they had seen the can of tangleleg change hands, and that one of the Indians involved had corroborated Tugwell's part. For their role in the brief drama, the constables had been awarded half the fine.

Eighteen months later, Mr. Tugwell was again in the news, and in the courtroom. This time he was in the role of accuser, charging a ruffian named Rooke with having created a disturbance at the tavern. Apparently, upon having Rooke hauled before the magistrate, that official had commented unfavorably upon Tugwell's use of force.

"Be pleased to insert in your paper the following facts relative to a case recently brought before the police magistrate by me, on the 8th instant," an indignant Tugwell wrote the editor. "A marine named Rooke came to my house and upon my refusing to give him any more drink, became furious. He broke up tables, glasses and doors, and otherwise behaved in a most outrageous manner."

"Failing to pacify him, I was obliged, in defence of my own life and others, to tie him until I could procure a police officer, he frequently having threatened to take my life. Had I acted otherwise, murder might have been committed by the man who bears a very bad character, he having shot at his corporal on San Juan Island, and for which offence he was tried and imprisoned."

"My wife having been grossly insulted by this man whilst bound, caused me to strike him once. Several sailors witnessed the affair and are willing to state that I treated the man with more leniency than he deserved. I requested of a marine artillery sergeant to take charge of the man; but he refused to do so, on the grounds that he was too desperate a character and advised me to let the civil power take its course. It appears my conduct in the matter has not met with the approval of the police magistrate, who threatens investigation and withdrawal of my licence. I consider myself aggrieved (sic) at the decision given, also the reflections cast on my house.

"The enclosed testimonial will tend to prove it is conducted as respectably as any similar house in the district. We are a long way from police assistance here, and there are no pickets patrolling in the neighborhood, therefore we are left to our own ingenuity to protect ourselves. In conclusion I beg leave to say I will only be too glad if the case is gone into, for I feel satisfied that from the facts of the case being made known, the remarks of the police magistrate yesterday cannot be sustained."

Tugwell had suffered the ages-old plaint that a policeman is never around when needed; he was soon to learn the fire department could be hard to reach too.

Despite his court appearances, business at Bush Tavern must have prospered for, in June of 1889, Tugwell, "that well-known hotelkeeper," leased the Crown Hotel in Esquimaux, hailed as being "most pleasantly located and fitted up with special reference to the accommodation of families and travellers. Meals can be had at all hours."

Alas, misfortune continued to dog his footsteps. That December, a mysterious early morning fire razed the two-storey structure. According to those first on the scene, the blaze could have been extinguished with a bucket of water. Strangely, neither, was immediately forthcoming and the flames soon roared out of control.

Several off-duty sailors had charged to the rescue, braving the inferno to save much of the furnishings. As the alarm spread, two fire engines were dispatched from the harbor as bluejackets from HM Ships Charybdis, Sparrowhawk and Boxer raced ashore to join battle. Unfortunately, they arrived only in time to prevent the flames spreading to adjacent buildings and docks.

"The hotel," reported The Colonist, "was in the occupancy of Mr. Tugwell, who was absent at the sale of his property on Esquimaux Road by Mr. Franklin when the fire broke out. The origin of the fire is clearly traced to a defective stovepipe."

"A fine piano, while being lowered to the ground, fell and was smashed. The inhabitants of Esquimaux request us to return their sincere thanks to the officers of H.M. Fleet and their crews for valuable service rendered, without which a great portion of the town would have been laid in ashes."

The mystery deepened when it was reported the blaze could no longer be blamed on a stovepipe—there being none in the room where flames were first detected. Even more puzzling was the missing box of jewelry.

A boarder, Mrs. Annie Cox, had kept a box containing $1,100 in silver plate and jewels beneath her bed. When the flames were finally extinguished, the hotel in smoldering ruin, her treasure had vanished. Bluejackets who had stripped her room of furniture—accidentally dropping her grand piano two storeys—stoutly maintained they had seen no box; a careful search of the debris yielded no clue. Ironically, Mrs. Cox had insured her valuables for $1,500—but her policy had expired three days before.

The Colonist was still inclined to view the fire as accidental, although "it is just possible that the box was abstracted by a thief and the place fired to hide the theft."

Police investigation did, in fact, uncover a case of theft, a sailor's misappropriation of a book belonging to Mrs. Cox. The "hardened skinner" had grinned joyfully when sentenced to three months.

The following day, Tugwell and his bartender, William Young, were arrested on a charge of arson, police claiming they had fired the hotel by soaking furniture and carpets with coal oil. At the preliminary hearing, officers produced several articles salvaged from the building which smelled strongly of the volatile liquid.

According to their evidence, rooms remote from the origin of the fire had smelted of oil and much of the hotel's furnishings appeared to have been removed earlier. The busy constables further revealed the fact Tugwell had recently ordered two cans of coal oil and, when the blaze had erupted, bartender Young had "showed great indifference and apathy." Mr. Cox, husband of the victimized lady boarder, testified to having heard "mysterious movements about the house late at night, and a noise as if some person was cutting through a partition and removing beds and plaster."

Also entered as evidence was Mrs. Cox's treasure chest—empty.

Final link in the chain of circumstantial evidence was the remarkable premonition of one H. E. Wilby, who had accompanied Tugwell to the sale of his property. Before leaving, Wilby, who had "been impressed for some days with the belief that a fire would break out at Tugwell's," had instructed his wife to send a messenger by horse if fire should start during his absence.

The court had wasted little time in returning a charge of incendiarism, indicting Young as principal, Tugwell as accessory before the fact.

maintains, in Korea, a clinic at Pusan, a day-care centre at Kamehon, a vocational school for older boys and girls, and supplies some six tons of milk powder annually.

In Vietnam it keeps two beds in the Convalescent Centre. In Uganda it pays for a trained social welfare worker as supervisor for children. In Morocco it feeds, for two months of the year, over 3,000 Bedouin youngsters. In the Windward Islands it pays the operating expenses for various day-care centres for the very young offspring of parents who work; and in Hong Kong it is responsible for one of the larger centres in which over 100 children of all ages are cared for daily. All this costs a total of some $50,000 a year.

In Victoria, Gertrude E. McGill, 3441 Mayfair Drive, vice-president of the Fund for this province and the Island's head representative, collects for her special charity. She gets her husband in on the job, too. Mac, she says, counts the money that comes in, rolls up all the odds, and does the banking!

She has countless hard-working, dedicated helpers, whose names are too numerous to mention. The schools, both public and private, raise money by various projects for the Fund.

Inspector Bowden escorted the stunned pair to a cell for the night.

Brought before the bench the next day, Tugwell heard his application for bail denied. The trial proceeded slowly. Dec. 14, boatman named McKinnon testified he had been one of the first on the scene and had worked to rescue furniture from the flames. As for the smell of coal oil on certain furnishings, he said, he had been carrying two lamps down the ladder when a sailor bumped him, breaking one and spilling its contents over an easy chair and other pieces. Tugwell and Young were remanded eight days and released on sureties of $500 each.

When they again faced the magistrate, it was to claim that a servant named Johnson had started the fire when clearing hot ashes from the stove. The magistrate had replied that, as far as he was concerned at least, "the fire was most mysterious."

Finally, two months after the blaze, Tugwell and Young were discharged; "no evidence to fasten the crime upon them was produced."

According to the family account, mentioned earlier, the hotel venture had failed due to a smallpox epidemic.

Perhaps discouraged by this last unfortunate affair, Tugwell turned to homesteading, becoming Otter Point's first settler and, ultimately, inspiring the christening of Snake's Tugwell Creek. For six years he worked his land, a stage service between Sooke and Victoria, and the Sooke post office, not having his name in the news until precisely six years later, when it was reported a gilt eagle which had adorned the tragic steamer Pacific's wheelhouse had washed ashore near his home. The grim memento was displayed in the Adelphi Saloon.

Then Mrs. Tugwell, who had been ill for some time, died. "She was a kind-hearted, good neighbor and her loss is deeply regretted by her many friends."

In June, 1896, Thomas Tugwell was again making news, with his notarized statement that members of the Liberal party had attempted to bribe him to obtain secret documents belonging to the Conservative campaign headquarters, of which he was an organizer. There were charges and counter charges, names were called and the whole affair added to an already bitter federal campaign. The Liberals stoutly denied the charges. When ballots were counted, they had won the war but lost the battle, turning the new government in Ottawa, but losing both local seats to Tory incumbents Prior and Earle.

Then, from the stormy tempests of politics, Tugwell was off to the frigid goldfields of the Klondike, trying his luck in White Pass. His prospecting venture was brief, however, illness forcing him to discontinue. Upon recovery he opened a roadhouse at Log Cabin with Thomas Jr.

About 1903, again slowed by failing health, Tugwell retired to Victoria, dying two years later at the age of 67.

Thomas Jr. was no stranger to adventure, either, operating the Log Cabin Hotel and an heroic mail run through northern wilds from some years. He died at Uclulet in 1908.

A son, Bernard Tugwell, is Uclulet's justice of the peace.

The Ex-Wrens, the Jaycees, the Jay-Cee-ettes, the Sunday Schools, give of their time and cash. The CNIB knit gaily-colored blankets, and there is a hospital in Korea which has one of these on every one of its scores of children's beds. There is a lady living on Kilbarny Road, "I think she's 83," said Gertrude, who heads a group which meets every week to sew and knit for these faraway children. Our own children collect, especially at Halloween, for the Fund. Other people sell Christmas cards, and a lady out Langford way dresses beautiful dolls—all for The Cause.

Someone said in the press, not long ago, that we raise an outcry over cruelty in the seal hunts, or to cats and dogs, but never do a thing about children. It's not true. There are several organizations whose every concerted effort is devoted to the care of the world's poor and suffering, the destitute and neglected, the war-torn, the ill, the homeless ones. They do a superb job.

One of them is the Save the Children Fund. Because of Eglantyne, the English sweet-urrier Rose.

The penguin lays only one or two eggs a season while a prolific lady oyster lays approximately 60,000,000. In size, the ostrich lays the largest egg and the humming bird the smallest. The egg-laying habits of the domestic hen breaks no records. The hen, though, evidently feels no jealousy . . . she just consistently goes on laying about 200 eggs a year . . . and it's all in a good cause.

Eggs are one of the most nutritious foods in the human diet . . . they contain almost all of the vitamins and are one of the most versatile sources of protein. Through the ages eggs have been baked, boiled, fried, coddled, curried, poached, pickled, deviled, shirred and scrambled . . . what would we do without them?

Pricewise eggs are one of our least expensive sources of top quality protein.

With the price of meat going skyward most housewives find it necessary to find means of stretching the food dollar. Eggs could be, at least, part of the answer . . . even if it takes a dozen eggs to make a main course dish for your family you will be feeding them very economically indeed. Only the shell is wasted . . . compare that to the bone we buy in many cuts of meat. So, why not put a couple of extra cartons of eggs in your shopping cart this week?

It is hard to know where to start when you think of things to do with eggs because eggs lend themselves to a limitless variety of dishes . . . by themselves or in combination with other foods. In most cases, 3 eggs with any other nourishing protein such as cheese and a vegetable are sufficient as a serving.

Because it is holiday time and people are camping or picnicking we will start with a couple of camp type recipes. These can be cooked over a camp fire, barbecue or at home . . .

CAMPFIRE CORN-EGG SCRAMBLE . . . 2 Tbsp. fat, 8 eggs, 1 can cream style corn, 1 tsp. salt, a dash of pepper and 1 cup cubed cheddar cheese. Melt the fat in a heavy frying pan over campfire, then set aside to cool slightly. Meanwhile open a can of corn. With the warmed pan off the fire, break the eggs into it and stir with a fork only enough to blend yolks and whites lightly. Add the corn and seasonings and blend together. Return to the heat and cook gently until partially set. Add the cheese cubes and continue

BRIDE'S CORNER

ABOUT EGGS . . . An egg separates best when it is cold but it whips better at room temperature.

To shell a cooked egg . . . cool immediately in cold water. Crack the shell all over. Roll between the palms of the hands to loosen. Start peeling from the big end where the air pocket is. Dip in cold water to help ease the shell off. The fresher the egg the harder it is to remove the shell.

A dash of salt added to egg whites makes them easier to beat.

cooking until eggs are set to desired degree. Do remain in cubes. Eggs will continue to cook after they are removed from the fire so for a creamy scramble, remove from the heat before they are completely set. Yield 4 to 6 servings depending on sizes of appetites. With a tossed green salad, toasted French bread or rolls this makes a nourishing and satisfying meal.

SPANISH SCRAMBLE . . . 8 eggs, 1 large can stewed tomatoes (preferably containing celery, onion and seasonings), 1 to 2 Tbsp., butter or margarine, 1 tsp. finely crushed sweet basil, 1 tsp. MSG (Accent), ¼ tsp. Tabasco and salt and pepper to taste. Melt the butter in a heavy frying pan over camp fire. Set aside to cool slightly while tomatoes are being opened and liquid drained off into a cup or glass. Break eggs into cooled pan, add about 4 Tbsp. of tomato liquid and beat lightly with a fork to blend. Cook stirring constantly until eggs just begin to set. Add drained tomatoes and seasonings and continue cooking and stirring until eggs are of desired consistency. The tomato should be left in fairly big chunks. Serve in soup plates with a basket of hot buttered toast to use as a filling for toasted buns. This cooks equally well at home. Serves 4 to 6. If plain stewed tomatoes are used add a little dehydrated onion flakes and a few finely chopped celery leaves for added flavor.

With the children still in mind, how about Eggburgers?

EGGBURGERS . . . One-third cup finely minced onion, 4 to 5 Tbsp. fat (bacon fat is good), 3 cups soft bread crumbs, ¼ cup milk, 6 hard-cooked eggs chopped, seasoned salt to taste or 1 tsp. salt, ¼ tsp. celery salt and ¼ tsp. paprika, 6 hamburger buns. Melt 1 Tbsp. of fat in saucepan. Add onion and saute until transparent but not brown. Add bread crumbs and milk. Stir and cook slowly until thoroughly blended and thick. Remove from heat and add chopped eggs and seasonings. Spread on a plate and refrigerate until cool. When ready to cook, shape into 6 patties. Sprinkle lightly with flour and generously with paprika and brown on both sides in hot fat. Place at once on a warm split and buttered bun. Yield 6 burgers. To hard cook an egg . . . never BOIL an egg, this toughens them. Place eggs in saucepan and cover to depth of one inch with cold water. Bring just to boil. Remove pan from heat, cover, allow to stand for 25 minutes to hard cook eggs. Add three minutes more for extra large eggs.

Savory Eggs are an elegant dish . . . they may be prepared in individual casseroles or in a single shallow baking dish.

Melt the butter and saute the green pepper and onion rings (thinly sliced) until they are limp. Add the cornstarch blended with the tomato juice. Cook until thick, stirring constantly. Add salt, sugar and Tabasco. Cut hard cooked eggs in half. Remove the yolks and mash with a fork. Combine with salt, pepper, toast. Pour tomato sauce around and over eggs. Bake in a 350-deg. F. oven for 10 to 15 minutes. Makes 6 servings.

DEAR HELOISE:

I didn't have anything to put on the big wall behind my couch, so I made something!

One of a time, I had each of our four children stand against a wall with a sheet of white paper taped to the wall behind his head. I then focused a bright light on his head and drew the shadow of the profile and hair on the paper.

After I cut this shadow out, I traced it on heavy black paper and pasted it on a large sheet of white paper which I then put in a narrow black frame from the dime store.

Now I have life-size silhouettes of our four children above the couch—really a wonderful conversation piece.

Nadean Dotson

Charming idea, Nadean. And practically for free! I've also seen this done by putting black paper behind the child's head to begin with and tracing the outline of the shadow with a piece of chalk . . . then turning the paper over and cutting it out.

And oodles of thanks to you for a really inexpensive yet highly imaginative home brightener.

THOUGHT FOR FOOD

Imperial Potato Puff is another low cost but nourishing main dish. Eggs, cheese, mashed potatoes, all well seasoned and baked in a casserole.

IMPERIAL POTATO PUFF . . . One cup smoothly mashed potatoes, $\frac{1}{2}$ cup milk, 2 Tbsp. butter or margarine, $\frac{1}{4}$ pound cubed processed cheese, 4 beaten egg yolks, 2 Tbsp. finely chopped green pepper, 1 Tbsp. finely chopped onion, 1 tsp. Worcestershire sauce, 1 tsp. salt, dash pepper and 4 stiffly beaten egg whites. Combine mashed potatoes and milk, add butter and cheese cubes. Heat and stir until butter and cheese is melted. Remove from heat and gradually stir in beaten egg yolks. Stir in green pepper and onion. Stir in seasonings. Fold in stiffly beaten egg whites. Pour into a greased 6-cup casserole and bake in a 300-deg. F. oven for 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ hours. Serve immediately. Pass the chili sauce. Green beans or broccoli are good with this dish.

Eggs are not only a thrifty meat substitute but they are a boon to weight watchers.

An egg is relatively low in calories . . . only 72 to 80 calories according to size of the egg. Breakfast-skippers are frowned upon by nutritionists even if you are trying to lose weight. Breakfast should provide a good portion of the day's calories to give you the necessary energy for the morning's activities. A satisfying and healthful breakfast consisting of a glass of tomato juice, one egg, 2 strips of bacon and two pieces of lightly buttered toast is only about 400 calories. Black coffee is calorie-free.

Whatever the method of cooking eggs, seasoning is important. Whether it is added before or during cooking, or at the table, Tabasco is ideal. This liquid red pepper blends smoothly and its vigor peeps up the bland flavor of all egg dishes.

DEAR HELOISE:

Here is an idea for transferring pattern markings to the material.

Put a straight pin through each dot on the pattern, picking up only a very small bit of material (be sure to go through both thicknesses, if double).

After all the pieces are cut out, place them pattern-side down on an ironing board and press over the markings with a steam iron. Remove the pins, and presto—there is a tiny indentation in the material to show the position of the dots.

No threads to remove, no carbon markings to clean off. This method cannot be

Summer is for gardens. And Victoria is for gardens, too. We have herb gardens, knot gardens, rock gardens, and gardens in quarries. We have big gardens and little gardens, both public and private. One garden, however, of special interest is Marine Garden which fronts Island Tug and Barge on Harbor Road, and it tempts one to a consideration

OF TUGBOATS and GARDENS

By MARGARET S. BELFORD

Island Tug and Barge has been a part of the Victoria scene since 1925, but the garden did not come into being until 1950 when the firm's founder, Harold B. Elworthy decided to create a garden on reclaimed land around the Victoria offices.

Perhaps all men of the sea have a hankering also for the land. The organization which started out in 1925 with just one tug, the Island Planet, has now grown to vast proportions, and along with success Mr. Elworthy is still a strong believer that industry does not have to preclude beauty. He doesn't like dull business premises and would rather see them beautiful. Also, he tells me with pride, since the Marine Garden came into being a goodly number of business firms here have followed his lead.

But to revert for a moment to things nautical. Tugboats have always been the work-horses of the sea, and here on the Pacific Coast they began to be very much a part of the ocean scene toward the end of the last century.

The old sailing ships were no match for the tides and strong prevailing winds around these shores, and when logging operations in the province became a rapidly expanding industry, then the barges and the tugs with their immense towing powers came into their own.

Among early B.C. tugs were the Lorne and the Pilot. Another, not famous for efficiency, was the Union, more commonly known as the Sudden Jerk, since she was capable of moving at one speed only, and that in a forward direction. She was, of all things, powered by a threshing machine engine!

But while most tugs start their working lives as tugs, many of the barges they tow have come to this state of affairs after years of useful service in other fields, such as steamships, barques, landing barges from the last war, and old sailing ships. And hereby hangs the story of the Marine Gardens on Harbor Road, for a number of the early barges in the Island Tug and Barge fleet were converted from old ships.

A ship is like a human being. She has her own personality and life history, and simple conversion can never blot out her past. So, into Harold Elworthy's mind crept the idea of retaining certain parts of the old ships made over.

It could have been that Island Tug and Barge would have had a corner graveyard piled with old, rusting junk and rotting wood. But instead, the Marine Garden came into being as a place of remembrance where parts of old ships could come to rest in dignified seclusion among the rocks and azaleas; the flowering plants and peartwort moss of a garden.

Here it should be mentioned that while the garden was thought up by Mr. Elworthy, he likes it to be known that the late Mrs. Charles Steel, whose own garden on Howe Street was a thing of rare beauty, was the one who actually planned and oversaw the making of the Marine Garden.

At the time, Mrs. Steel was confined to a wheelchair, but every day she was down there superintending the placing of rocks, choosing plants and generally helping to create the ideal setting for the old mementoes of the sea.

Island Tug and Barge has a little pamphlet recording where each item in the garden came from.

For instance, the two lifeboats and the steering wheel came from the early company tugs, whilst the propeller was once part of a landing barge used during the last war.

The garden also sports a sun dial which has been converted from a binacle-stand which once formed part of a barque built by the late Sir Thomas J. Lipman and named after him.

There is a teakwood seat and an anchor from the sailing barque Lord Templeton, and an old-time figurehead from the sailing ship Riversdale.

From the Princess Maquinna comes the mast which now serves as a flagpole, while the little gun which looks like a miniature cannon is a 1.5-lb line-throwing gun used in rescue work, and was once part of the lifesaving apparatus which made famous the U.S. Coast Guard tug Snohomish.

Finally, there are the anchor chains and the capstans which come respectively from the sailing ships Homeward Bound and Somali.

Listed matter-of-factly, these items do not, perhaps, stir the imagination too much. It is when one starts to look into the ships' logs and browse over old records that the true romance of the Marine Garden begins to take hold of one.

That propeller from the landing barge—what stories of gallantry and heartbreak; of loss and high courage it might tell. The Homeward Bound, for instance, started out life as a British full-rigged ship with the name of Zeminder. She was built at Belfast in 1918 by the firm of Harland and Wolff and, in 1900, she passed into German ownership and became the Otto Gledemister.

The following year she was dismantled and towed to San Francisco where Hind, Ralph and Co. bought her and re-rigged her as the Homeward Bound.

Incidentally, it took a special act of Congress to secure her full American registry in 1902. Seven years later, she became the property of the Alaskan Packers, and for the next 30 years she remained in Northern waters, making her last Alaska voyage in 1929 under the name of Star of Holland.

In a sense, it must have been a sort of home-coming when the old one-time sailing ship came into the hands of Island Tug and Barge in 1932. True, she became at last a barge, but at the same time, she regained her old name of Homeward Bound, and she also regained her British registry.

The sailing barque, Lord Templeton was another Belfast-built ship, though she was junior to the Zeminder by one year since she first slipped off the ways in 1886.

For many years she had a close association with Victoria because, in 1900, she came out here to R. P. Rithet & Co. She was registered in Victoria and continued to sail under the British flag. But dark days were ahead for the Lord Templeton. Sail went out of fashion and, with a large fleet of kitted sailing ships, she was laid up in San Francisco Bay where she remained until bought by Island Tug and Barge in 1935.

Despite her subsequent usefulness, the Lord Templeton was finally scrapped in 1957. So the ship of sail who once pointed her proud bow to the sea off the coast of Ireland ended her days here in Victoria with only a teakwood seat and a hinge-type anchor as her memorial.

An interesting point is that she was outlived by a Son of Ireland in the person of Capt. Patrick F. McManus, born the same year as the Templeton, and whose adventurous career included service in deep-sea sailing vessels from the age of 14.

One of the vessels on which the young Patrick McManus served was none other than the Lord Templeton. In later years, Capt. McManus became a well-known B.C. Coast pilot. He died in 1962 at the age of 76.

The Riversdale was another sailing ship and was built in Glasgow in 1894. She also, for a time, passed into German ownership and, as a result, was laid up at Santa Rosalia, Mexico, at the outbreak of the First World War.

During her German period she was named the Harvestshade, but on coming to Victoria with the Lord Templeton in 1935, she was converted to a barge and regained her old name.

Her figurehead, which is said to represent a Madonna, has a very martial air. The short jacket is certainly Madonna blue, but under it she wears what is unmistakably an old-fashioned gentleman's stock. It is necessary to take into account her slightly feminine outline and her bun of fair hair to convince oneself of her gender!

The Princess Maquinna whose mast now serves as a flagpole, was built in Victoria in 1913. She was actually under construction at B.C. Marine Railway Co. Ltd. of Esquimalt when that firm was bought by Sir Alfred Yarrow of the great Glasgow shipbuilding firm of the same name.

She was the first B.C. vessel launched under the Yarrow designation, and she was christened by Mrs. W. FitzHerbert Bullen, wife of the head of the Marine Railway. Mrs. Bullen was also the granddaughter of Sir James Douglas, founder of Victoria and father of British Columbia.

The Maquinna was known and loved for many years in these waters. Indeed, she was specially designed and built for the West Coast run she was to make without interruption for the next 40 years. Her Victoria home was the inside berth at the Belleville Street docks.

Major George Nicholson, in his book Vancouver Island's West Coast, 1762-1962, says: "Promptly at 11 p.m. every tenth day, a short toot of her whistle and with perhaps a dozen people on hand to bid goodbye to friends or relatives bound up-coast, Old Faithful slipped her lines and silently backed out to begin the first leg of another trip to Port Alce and back."

But the Maquinna, for all her regularity of service, had her moments of high adventure, too. One such came in 1915 on a return trip to Victoria. She had left Tofino on Thanksgiving Day in the face of heavy winds and high seas.

With the storm ever worsening, Captain Gillan said the weather was as bad as any he had ever seen in his long years of navigating on the west coast, and he was preparing to put about and run for shelter when the lookout reported a sailing vessel in distress and almost in the breakers off the port bow.

This was a full-rigged Chilean ship, the Carolanapu, which had started out her life as the Liverpool-built Kinross.

When sighted by the Maquinna, her few sails were in shreds and almost stripped away, leaving most of her yards bare. Even her two anchors could not hold her against the fury of the southwest gale which was rapidly driving her onto the rocks.

In an effort to save her crew, Captain Gillan managed to take the Maquinna to within 200 yards of the stricken ship, whereat the Chilean seamen made a gallant attempt to launch two boats. Both of these were swamped at once, however, by waves reaching a height of 50 feet.

Such was the fury of the storm that the Maquinna's steel anchor was torn from her

parted both her anchor chains and sent her crashing on the rocks. Without her anchor, the Maquinna could do no more, and in any case it was believed that all hands on the Carelmapu were lost in the boats or swept from her decks before she struck.

When the storm abated, however, leaving the remains of the Chilean ship high on the rocks, her captain, three crewmen, and a young passenger crawled to safety from the wreck. The remaining men of the ship's company were all lost.

The Maquinna was dismantled at Vancouver in 1953, and her hull became for some years a towed cargo barge named the Taku. All that remained of this once great ship, in the form of the Taku, was finally scrapped at False Creek in 1962, after lying idle for a number of years. A sad end to a ship which had been the pride of the west coast since 1913.

That year, 1913, was notable in this part of the world for another item of nautical news, and a very different one to the launching of the Maquinna.

In July of that year a feat of navigation came to light which, while it was to cause considerable annoyance to the Canadian authorities, was, none the less, a very remarkable event.

The villagers of Bella Bella looked up one day to see, of all things, a 60-foot Japanese sampan putting into shore. Eleven Japanese were hastily landed, and before the astonished people of Bella Bella could get over their surprise, the captain of the sampan had put to sea again, and despite a wide search that sampan was never seen again.

Such a flagrant case of illegal entry into the country could not go unheeded and, in due course, eight of the 11 men so landed were picked up by immigration officials and held for deportation when they subsequently arrived in Vancouver.

In court, it was learned that these men had paid the intrepid sampan captain amounts varying from $50 to $100 each to bring them across the Pacific and land them somewhere near Seattle.

It would seem that the captain felt discretion was the better part of valor, and that Bella Bella was as near to Seattle as he could go. Even so, what a feat to stir the imagination!

One small, frail fishing craft with 27 men aboard, setting out to sail all those thousands of miles of open sea in a matter of 70 days, and the only navigational equipment aboard was an ancient compass which was no more than a needle balanced on an upright pivot, and a six-inch-square map of North America. That sampan,
I think, deserved to go free!

So, we come at last to the Snohomish, the former U.S. Coast Guard tug built in 1908 in Wilmington, Delaware. Her line of work was always that of lifesaving and salvage, and she was specially built with this in mind. Because of this, she represented a major step toward safety at sea in the Pacific Northwest.

When she was bought by Island Tug and Barge in 1937, she was already famous for her rescue and salvage exploits, and while her future Victoria-based work would be part of the operation of a barge service from Vancouver Island to Powell River and Port Angeles, her name continued to be quite a good deal in the news.

There was a time in 1941 when disaster struck the Snohomish in a somewhat unusual accident. She was actually sunk in Seymour Narrows when she was grounded and rammed by her tow. This tow, however, happened to be the tank barge S.O. No. 5. Those in the know about such matters will recall that the S.O. No. 5 was, at the time, the largest barge in the world. So, at least, the old Snohomish could boast that it took the biggest and best to get her under! And "under" was certainly the word, for she was submerged to the top of her stack. However, two months later she was successfully refloated and returned to service.

Perhaps the greatest highlight of her whole career came in 1947 when the Snohomish made her now world-famous tow to Buenos Aires from the Puget Sound.

At that time under the command of Captain
F. R. McFarlane, she towed six 74-foot surplus U.S. Navy tugs which were stowed on the deck of the 278-foot barge Island Yarder.

Such a long tow—from Seattle to Buenos Aires, which is a distance of some 11,000 miles—was certainly something to tell the world about. It was, of course, only one of the many long tows undertaken by Island Tug and Barge, the firm which has made a name for itself in this line.

But while the shipping world cheered this great achievement, the arrival in Buenos Aires marked the end of the west coast era for the old Snohomish. She was sold, upon arrival, to the South American republic, and in 1948 was commissioned as a unit of the Argentine Navy.

For 11 years she continued in service, but in 1959 she was reported lost with all hands in a violent storm off Cape Horn.

So ended the life of a gallant ship. But other great tows were there to take her place. The Sudbury and the Sudbury II, for instance, both long noted for their rescue missions at sea—one of the most dramatic of which was the successful salvage of the Makadonia in 1954. The Sudbury on that occasion managed to put a line on the crippled ship near Kamchatka Peninsula, and in spite of high winds and heavy seas, was successful in towing her to safety—a distance of 3,500 miles. It might well be said that marine world held its breath during the 31 long days it took to accomplish this mission.

So, while the existing fleet of Island Tug and Barge continues to make a name for itself on the deep seas, there in a garden lie the salty memories of the past.

As one touches the painted wood of the old

By ARCHIE H. WILLS

In those hectic days I was a marine editor, covering the water-fronts of Victoria and Esquimalt, and was well aware of the turmoil which had replaced the normal tranquility of these towns. Despite a general belief, wars never erupt suddenly, they are carefully planned and prepared for years in advance, and, although the First World War was officially declared on Aug. 4, 1914, even in a remote area like ours, protective steps had been taken some days in advance.

Much has been written about the purchase of the two submarines which protected Victoria from suspected ransom and pillage in the early days of August, 1914. But there remains to be told the story of the mystery man in the deal. He was referred to as a hobo, a disreputable looking covey and, at one critical moment, he was regarded as a spy.

When a Royal Commission, over a year later, reviewed the purchase, following charges of "handouts" and "contributions to party funds," the mystery man was never fully identified and was referred to as merely "a man named Brown." He was not called to give evidence because, following the panning of the danger to Victoria, he had been transferred to Halifax for Atlantic service with the Royal Canadian Navy.

HOBO, SPY, MYSTERY

MAN of SUBMARINE DEAL

For instance, the lighthouse tender Quadra, which had been tending aids to navigation on the West Coast of Vancouver Island on July 26, received orders to return to Esquimalt at full speed. Two days later she embarked 18 officers and 30 other ranks from militia units in Victoria and headed for sea under sealed orders. Next morning residents of Bamfield, where the All-Red cable from Australia came up out of the sea, were surprised to see the soldiers placed as guards around the cable station. Quadra deposited other troops at strategic points on the coast. Yet, there had been no declaration of war, which, according to fighting etiquette in those days, was a requirement.

The two top naval posts at Esquimalt were held by one man, Commander Walter Hase. He was in charge of the shore establishment and also commander of HMCS Rainbow. At this critical period he was at sea in Rainbow and the meagre shore establishment was left in the hands of Lieut. H. B. Pilcher.

Loose on the broad horizon of the Pacific was the powerful German squadron under Admiral Von Spee. It included two heavily armed cruisers, Scharnhorst and Gneisenau and the light cruisers Leipzig, Nürnberg and Dresden. The notorious cruiser, Emden had been assigned to the Indian ocean, where she had allied shipping at her mercy for many months.

Victorians, in the mounting tension, concluded that Von Spee would head for the capital, capture it and instal as Emperor of British Columbia, a former business man of the city, Count Alvo von Alvensleben, who had ducked over to Seattle to await a call from Berlin. While we all had faith in our boys who had taken over the forts which encircled our area, we knew in our hearts there was nothing here to stop a German landing.

A very good description of the mood of Victoria in those anxious days was given to the Royal Commission by the then manager of the Bank of Commerce, bankers for the B.C. Government. He was F. L. Crawford and he testified as follows:

"There was an incipient run on the banks, pretty much everywhere I fancy. The action of the Dominion Government in declaring bank notes legal tender reduced that panic very quickly, but, the banks in general, felt that the situation was highly dangerous and much of the gold here was shipped to interior points, also the securities. We felt that, in the event of the Leipzig bombarding Victoria and demanding a large ransom and anything else, but it would probably hold us up and take all our gold and securities.

"The general panic was a serious one and I was frequently called upon by telephone for advice by people who wanted to know if they should move their families and things. Motor cars were held in readiness to evacuate people."

Our newspaper offices were bombarded with rumors and requests for a true evaluation of the situation. The papers were the only means of communication and circulation figures showed big gains.

Into the picture came Sir Richard McBride, premier of B.C., who appealed to Ottawa for assistance. But, Ottawa was 1,600 miles removed from the danger spot and, in addition, has always been hard-of-hearing whenever this part of the country was talking. McBride was generally regarded as the best-looking politician Canada has ever had, and he was shrewd, courageous and couldn't be hoodwinked, as, he was a good lawyer.

If Ottawa wouldn't do anything he would. He began confiding in his friends, including Frank Barnard, later Sir Frank and Lieutenant-Governor of B.C.; Harry Barnard, M.P. for Victoria, brother of Frank; H. B. Thomson, member of the Legislature for Victoria and a prominent business man; H. F. Bullen, head of the B.C. Marine Railway (now Yarrow's) and Capt. W. H. Logan, Lloyd's agent here. They held meetings in the Union Club, always the scene for such events.

A suggestion was made that a Citizens' Committee be formed and overtures made to purchase a Chilean battleship, rumored to be on the market. Before this could be followed up, J. V. Paterson, president of the Seattle Construction and Drydock Co., appeared in town with an offer of two submarines, on which the Chilean Government had defaulted in payments.

The submarines were in Seattle and were named the Antofagasta and the Lquique, after two Chilean ports which were well known to sailing ship men. The Chileans had made payments on the subs but they began to question their "sea endurance" and claimed they were overweight. However, the Chileans still had some of their men aboard the subs.

Hon. Martin Burrell, a cabinet minister from Ottawa, entered into the discussions but still Ottawa dilly-dallied. McBride then asked Capt. Logan to telephone Paterson in Seattle and seek a firm price for the subs. Paterson replied instantly, setting the price of $550,000 for each sub, a total of $1,100,000, a rather hefty price for McBride to meet out of the sparse provincial revenue, which had been sorely reduced by the collapse of the real estate boom of 1912. Paterson, using a commonsense approach, asked Logan to get a quick answer as he had other offers for the subs.

By Aug. 3 McBride had had no luck with Ottawa. He called Logan to his office and instructed him to conclude the deal with Paterson, who demanded a government cheque, signed by the proper authorities.

Negotiations now entered a delicate stage and it is no wonder that Lieut. Pilcher suffered a nervous breakdown not long after. He had no authority from Ottawa to be engaged in such dealings yet he had to work closely with McBride, who had hurriedly arranged with the Bank of Commerce to advance the $1,100,000. It was up to Pilcher to send the telegram, which clinched the deal. When Paterson received it, it simply said: "Have got money."

Now we come to undercover work. On the afternoon of Aug. 4, a parade of able seamen was called at the dockyard, mostly local businessmen who had been called to duty because they were weekend sailors and known as reservists.

"Fall out Able Seaman Brown, T. A.," ordered a petty officer.

who still walks our streets. He is Thomas A. Brown, chairman of P. R. Brown, Ltd., one of the oldest real estate and insurance firms in Victoria.

It is difficult, after a lapse of over half a century, to believe that this dapper man, who always wears a rose or carnation on the lapel of his suit coat and, who, has one of the most attractive gardens in the city — at the corner of Weald and Cotswold in the Uplands — was once described as a "hobo" and "a disreputable knocking cook."

Brown was quickly briefed on the part he was to play in securing the submarines. When he joined Capt. Logan that night on board the steamer Iroquois bound for Seattle he bore no resemblance to an able seaman. His disguise was so good that he looked like a hobo.

Logan and Brown went to a hotel on reaching Seattle and the latter remained out of sight, as he was in a compromising position. The day before, Canada had declared war on Germany, the United States was a neutral country and Brown was an able seaman in the Canadian Navy. It would have been indiscreet to have him identified in Seattle.

Logan contacted Paterson and plans for the escape from Seattle during darkness, were made. Late afternoon Brown was picked up and he landed aboard the submarines with Logan and Paterson. Up to this point no Canadian had inspected the subs, no money had been paid over and the deal was being conducted on a man's word.

Paterson had his own problems, as the exact status of the submarines with the Chilean representatives, was in doubt and he also had to get crews to handle the vessels who would not be suspicious of movements. Then he had to make sure there were no Chileans on board or around at the time of departure.

Logan and Paterson went aboard one sub and Brown went aboard the other and they were there when night came. No suspicions were aroused and when the crews went to stations, they took Paterson's word for it that they were going on another test run.

With darkness, came a black fog which blotted out everything. This was to Paterson's advantage and eliminated the risk of being identified.

When running on the surface submarines use their diesel engines, but Paterson was afraid the noise of their exhausts might cause an alarm, so he sneaked out of Seattle harbor on the batteries. Once clear of Alki Point he ordered the diesels cut in and the subs headed for their rendezvous at their regular 13 knots. There was little difference in the size of the subs, one being 152 feet long and the other 144 feet, but both had the same speed.

The rendezvous, where the $1,150,000 would be paid over had been set in international waters, five miles off Trial Island. The subs would be met by a mother ship, the Salvor, of the Pacific Salvage Co., which would have on board naval parties which would take over the subs, once an inspection had proved them to be satisfactory. This was another factor which caused Paterson some uneasiness.

At Esquimalt Lieut. Pilcher was confronted with the task of getting the take-over crews. He found one retired Royal Navy Lieutenant who had had experience with subs, Lieut. Bertram Jones. He rounded up 32 men, of which number 23 were volunteers and had had no previous naval experience.

Before Salvor sailed, Sir Richard McBride arrived at Esquimalt with a janitor, who had the check for $1,150,000, which he handed to Pilcher, who in turn handed it to Jones.

There was a light fog at the rendezvous, which helped conceal the exchange when the two parties met. Paterson was anxious to complete the deal quickly but he hadn't reckoned on Jones, who insisted on a careful inspection of one of the subs. Jones then insisted on inspecting the other sub, which further annoyed Paterson. At this moment he became suspicious of Brown. He thought he might be a spy and decided to keep close to him while the inspection was made.

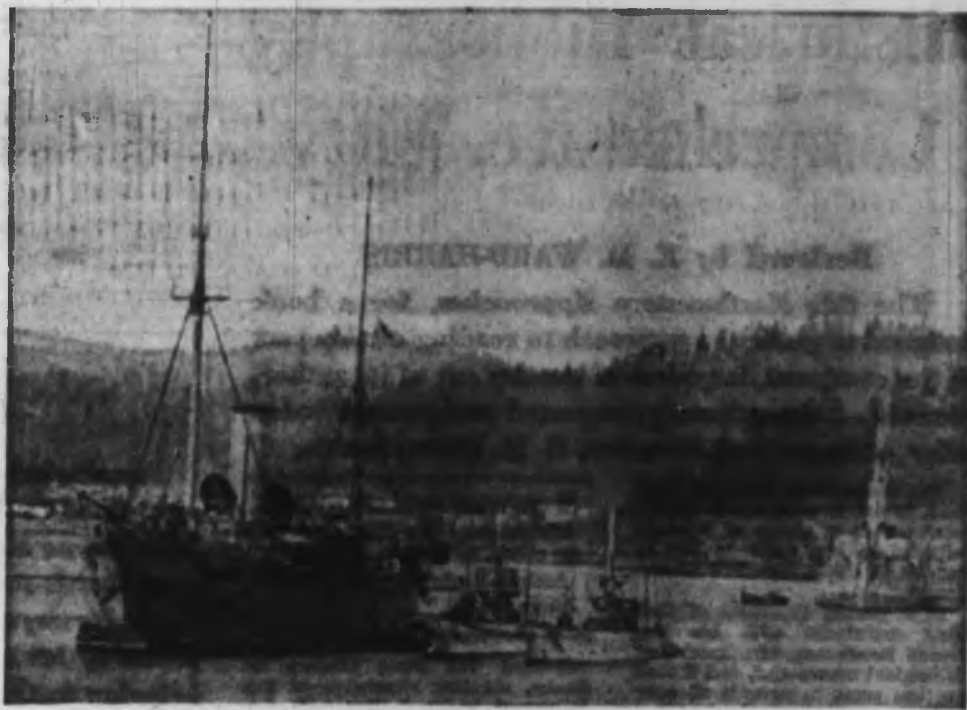

When Jones was satisfied with the subs he handed over the $1,150,000 check and asked for a receipt. Paterson didn't like this and said he thought Jones had sufficient proof when he took over the submarines. But Jones was playing it safe and Paterson found a scrap of paper and wrote out a receipt.

Jones then asked Paterson about torpedoes as he hadn't seen any aboard the subs.

Paterson replied quickly and bluntly: "We produce the ships but are not an ordnance department."

This shortcoming was a closely guarded secret and while Victorians felt a little more secure when they saw the subs training off the water-front and even in Victoria harbor they did not know they were useless, for the time being.

While the delivery crew and the takeover crew

watched on the decks of the subs, the Stars and Stripes were lowered and the White Ensign of the Royal Canadian Navy was raised and British Columbia became the only province ever to have a navy of its own.

The tricky part of the operation was over and Paterson was relieved as the subs and Salvor headed for Esquimalt harbor, but no one had anticipated an episode which almost sent the two little craft to the bottom. In the turmoil at the dockyard no one here had thought of informing the commanding officer of the forts that strange-looking ships would be entering Esquimalt.

As the ships closed in on the entrance to Esquimalt harbor, the guard ship Malaspina picked them up, turned tail, headed for the harbor at full speed and raised the alarm.

Immediately, all the guns, 12-pounders, six-inch and 9.2s, at Macculay, Signal Hill, Black Rock, Duntze Head and Rodd Hill, were manned, loaded and trained on what was believed to be the landing party from the German fleet, ready to take over this part of the world.

Lt. Col. Angus in charge of the forts, hesitated to give the order to fire, which would have blown the subs and Salvor to pieces. He kept his glasses fixed on the apparitions as they partially concealed their movements, and, as one of the subs breasted a swell, he caught a glimpse of a White Ensign. Still in doubt as to their identity, he held his fire until the dockyard was questioned. When assured the subs were friendly he gave the order to "Stand Down."

There was relief all around when the subs were tied up at Esquimalt and the news spread throughout the city. The navy was supposed to maintain secrecy but I recall how impossible it was to keep such a happening from the public, especially when Seattle knew about it and was telling the story.

British Columbia also had to make the most of its quarrel with Ottawa over its tardiness in coming to the defense of the country and it wanted to get repayment of the $1,150,000 it had paid for the submarines. This was soon accomplished and the subs passed into the hands of the RCN and were renamed CC-1 and CC-2.

It had been expected that the subs could use the torpedoes which HMCS Rainbow carried, but her tubes were 14-inch and the tubes on the subs were 18-inch. It was learned that HMCS Niobe, stationed at Halifax, had 18-inch tubes, whereupon arrangements were made to ship some torpedoes here for the subs. I recall one story, which went the round after the torpedoes had reached Esquimalt, that one of them had carried a war-head all the way. But, that's the type of rumor we were beset with in those rather embarrassing days.

Such was the enthusiasm of the naval reservists here that, within a few weeks, 88 of them had been trained to handle the subs efficiently. It is surprising how, in such emergencies, men can be trained to do most jobs in the services, which take many months and even years in peacetime.

Life became more livable now the submarines were guarding our approaches and people actually believed that they could sink the biggest German warships with their torpedoes. However, Lieut. Pilcher was not satisfied with his defenses and commandeered the Grand Trunk Pacific steamer Prince George as a hospital ship, to be handy in case Rainbow picked up the German fleet and an engagement followed. Those of us who knew the armament of ancient Rainbow and the superiority of the modern German cruisers, hoped Rainbow would never get close even to the smallest of the Germans.

Prince George came to Esquimalt, was fitted with an elevator, and in addition to her regular crew, was manned by naval officers and ratings and doctors and nurses from local hospitals. In her rush to get to sea she went out with only one side painted white and the "red cross" had been painted on her middle funnel instead of in the required place, on the sides, amidships.

Then, Pilcher commandeered the Blue Funnel steamer Proteus on her arrival at William Head quarantine station from the Orient. She was permitted to go to Seattle to unload her cargo and was later released.

In the back of most Victorians' minds still lurked the threat from the German fleet, its whereabouts on the Pacific unknown. One morning Leipzig put into San Francisco for coal, provisions and orders from the German command there. A few hours after Rainbow slipped through the Golden Gate, international rules permit but a 24-hour stay in a neutral port and this created a setting for the much awaited clash between Rainbow and a German cruiser, as soon as they were outside the three-mile limit. But they never met.

Leipzig had more important work to do than fun about with Rainbow, rejoining von Spee and heading south in the Channel, where they hoped to pick up a British squadron, including the battleship Camperdown and the cruisers Good Hope and Monmouth. In that engagement the British squadron was annihilated.

Victorians, in the meantime, held to the hope that Rainbow would deliver a knockout punch to some German ship. When Rainbow, game to the core, left San Francisco she cleared her decks for action, tossing overboard considerable woodwork and other unwanted material. When this was discovered by San Francisco newsmen the uncensored reports which flowed made it look as though Rainbow had been sunk and there was dismay in Victoria.

Then followed some of the craziest rumors of this period. I recall four of them. One said that the Leipzig had been cooking off mouth of the Columbia River and was poised upon and sunk by the French cruiser Montcalm. But, having done the job inside United States waters, nothing could be said about it by Montcalm.

Another rumor said that Leipzig, after leaving San Francisco, had headed north and put into Ketchikan for further loading. She was

Historical Bibliography Comprehensive, Witty

Reviewed by E. D. WARD-HARRIS

The title Northwestern Approaches, for a book designed to guide the approach to reading of this part of the continent, is typical of the dry wit of its author, Victoria's internationally respected antiquarian bookseller, collector and librarian, R. D. Hilton Smith.

This competently designed book about books, a compact 67 pages, grew out of a series of lectures delivered by Mr. Smith in 1968 to students at UBC's School of Librarianship.

In a ghastly repetition of Carlyle's experience with his The French Revolution, Mr. Smith lost his original manuscript, and it took him two years to write it all over again.

This comprehensive bibliography,

OXFORD DICTIONARY

POCKET OXFORD DICTIONARY, Fifth Edition; 1,048 pages; $1.50.

The fifth edition of the Pocket Oxford Dictionary has been published by Oxford University Press.

The changes made in this edition reflect the changes that have taken place since the last edition was published in 1942. The newly added words set the contemporary scene. There are not only words of the new technology: cybernetics, laser, maser, sputnik, and so on. There are also the more domestic words that we take for granted, forgetting how recently they became part of our life. They tell a story of shopping in the supermarket for soap and paperbacks, of drip-dry T-shirts for teenagers, of golden handshakes and retirement pensions, of sacred cows and sausages. New senses are added to old words: there are stork jokes, and surgical transplants. More subtle changes are made in definitions and illustrative quotations. A driver had survived as "coachman" in the last edition and a suitcase was a "small portmanteau"; no longer does anyone say "it needs more servants than I have"—in the fifth edition it just needs more money.

The Pocket Oxford Dictionary was compiled by the Fowler brothers, who are famous for their books on English usage, and first published in 1924. Like all the Oxford dictionaries, its ultimate source is the great 13-volume Oxford English Dictionary. The fifth edition has been revised by F. McIntosh with etymologies revised by G. W. S. Friedrichsen.

A feature of the new edition is the Supplement of nearly 1,200 Australian and New Zealand words, many of them quite unknown outside the two countries.

NORTHWESTERN APPROACHES: The First Century of Books, by R. D. Hilton Smith; Adelphi Bookshop, Victoria; 67 pages; $6.50.

sub-titled The First Century of Books, supplies knowledge of the important books dealing with the exploration of B.C., and therefore of this province's early history.

Designed expressly for the benefit of collectors, librarians, booksellers and students, Northwestern Approaches, to the author's surprise (but no one else's), is also appealing to the general reading public.

The reason is not that this historical bibliography, in the traditional academic manner, is presented in context with the events which spawned the books themselves, but that, untraditionally, it is presented in an eminently readable and witty style.

Mr. Smith has divided his book into five parts. Following a comprehensive introductory chapter giving historical background, books are grouped, instead of in chronological order, under national headings: Spaniards and Russians; British; French, and Americans.

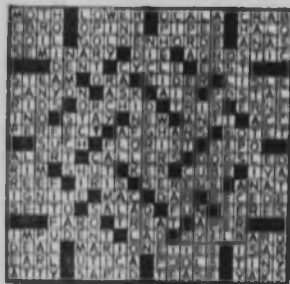

Each section lists titles of books collectors should look for and titles, both ancient and modern, anyone interested in the history of British Columbia should, and should not, bother with.

The bibliography compiled by this well-known Canadian expert is such that no specialist can afford to be without a copy of this valuable volume. Its wider appeal lies in the erudite and humorous capsule accounts of the famous and infamous deeds (and motives) of the various waves of explorers.

Mr. Smith writes so engagingly that some people may be tempted to think that in reading Northwestern Approaches they have read the history of the Northwest and so not bother to read anything else.

This is most certainly not the object of Mr. Hilton Smith, whose excellent and timely limited edition, privately printed and available only at The Adelphi Bookshop, is only the key to the literary riches it lists.

ANSWER TO LAST WEEK'S PUZZLE

NEW BOOKS and AUTHORS

Maclean Behind Maclean's

Paradoxical—that's the only word to describe John Bayne Maclean and even that is scarcely adequate. He was enormously proud of his humble upbringing in the 1870s as the son of a minister in southwestern Ontario.

He was proud, too, of the fact that when he left to seek his fortune in the big city (quaint, turn-of-the-century Toronto) his first job was as a reporter at $5 a week. But in later years his hobby was collecting eminent friends—the way others might collect stamps or coins. In the end, it was quite a collection, including Churchill, Coolidge, Rache, Schwab, and of course all the publishing tycoons of his era.

Yet he was no snob; he was just as interested in talking—and listening—to a waitress in the staff cafeteria or a printer in the plant, as to a captain of industry or a king. And despite his enormous power and the fact that his name became (and has remained) a household word in Canada, he carefully retained his privacy, so that he was something of an enigma to all but his closest friends. Now, one of these friends, Floyd S. Chalmers, has written a biography of the man behind the household word. Entitled A Gentleman of the Press, it was published by Doubleday Canada.

One of Maclean's most endearing paradoxes was that, despite being privately the staunchest of conservatives, he had such an obsession for integrity in high places and truth at all levels that his editorial policies constantly infuriated the establishment, to the extent that one apoplectic prime minister actually commanded that he be immediately "locked up in the tower!"

Perhaps his editorials did occasionally lose track of their central theme on route (the author, when editor of The Financial Post, had to threaten to quit to keep Colonel Maclean from inserting unsigned editorials, and even after that, once caught him sneaking down the back stairs to slip one directly to the typesetter), but his writing was always full of zest and a powerful sense of public purpose. In getting results, his batting average was surprisingly high.

So was his business acumen. The institution he founded at the turn of the century in Toronto and conducted through its first 60 years is today worth roughly $65,000,000, includes radio and television stations, and publishes periodicals in Canada, the United States, England, France, Germany and Italy. He hardly did it by himself—his special genius was in picking subordinates of exceptional ability—but he provided the leadership and inspiration.

A GENTLEMAN OF THE PRESS, by Floyd S. Chalmers; Doubleday; 384 pages; $8.95.

By the standards of his day—the standards of his friends—Northcliffe of England, and Hearst, Munsey, McClure and McCormick in the States—John Bayne Maclean earned his place among giants.

Colonel Maclean could ask for no more appropriate biographer than Floyd S. Chalmers, who worked closely with him as a colleague and friend for over 30 years, and who is this year retiring as chairman of the board of Maclean-Hunter, having served that company for a good half-century. The author is looking forward to being able to devote his time to his other major responsibility, the chancellorship of York University. But such have always been Mr. Chalmers' extracurricular activities—he was a member of the founding groups of both the Stratford Shakespeare Festival and the Canadian Opera Company—that he was one of the original recipients of the Order of Canada.

Like the colonel, the author is a stickler for unvarnished accuracy. His subject might not have appreciated his successor's frankness, but he would have been privately pleased that his old friend—with whom he battled almost daily—had determined to resist the temptation to be merely flattering and had told it all, exactly as it happened.

Picture History Of Indian Wars

FIGHTING INDIANS OF THE WEST, by Martin F. Schmitt and Dee Brown; Scribner; $15.

This book is precisely what it sets out to be—a picture history of the Indian wars. These wars constitute one of the less noble chapters in this nation's history.

When the westward migration began after the Civil War, Indians and buffaloes alike found themselves in the white man's way and both fell to him—the buffaloes in slaughter, the Indians in hard fighting that lasted a quarter-century. The distinction of this book lies less in its historical narrative than in its 250 or so photographs of the Indian chiefs and braves who fought those wars. Many of these historical photographs are the work of unjustly neglected pioneer camera artists and are published now for the first time. Authors and publisher are to be congratulated for having brought these remarkable photographs back into the mainstream of recorded history.

SOUTH PACIFIC ISLAND HOPPING

UTA sales representative Frank Winands, and Bill Lindauer of ASTA Travel News, New York.

There is enough to do on Tahiti alone to make the perfect South Sea Island holiday, but it would be a pity to be in the South Pacific and not get to the other islands where living is more primitive and entirely different.

Club Mediterraance package deals for $500 (U.S.) for two weeks or $679 for three weeks are all inclusive... transportation, meals, free use of an abundance of sports equipment, island excursions and picnics, similar to what Club Mediterraance offers in 35 other villages in Europe, North Africa, the Caribbean and United States, attracting 180,000 vacationers every year.

The Moorea Village has 310 guest beds in half as many double-occupancy thatched bungalows.

The fares, as the bungalows are called, are small and modestly furnished. Each unit is equipped with a large bathroom with hot and cold water shower.

Overlooking the white sand beach and lagoon is a big thatched kidge that houses bar and dance floor—centre of the club's social and night-time activity. A dance band plays pop and Tahitian numbers six nights a week and an animation director and assistants conduct games and stage comic shows, much as cruise directors on ocean liners keep passengers entertained. Drinks at the bar are not included in the package.

In the dining area long tables accommodate eight persons and are filled on a first come, first served basis which ensures different people are brought together for a convivial mixup at every meal. Newcomers dine with old hands and the opportunity to meet new people never ends.

Sports offerings include scuba diving, including lessons, spear fishing, shell collecting, water skiing, deep-sea fishing, horsetack riding, sailing, including lessons, cruising, hiking, volleyball, ping pong and outrigger canoeing.

Club Med travelling to other destinations include visits to Tahaa, mentioned earlier and to Bora Bora at an additional cost of $20 a day.

The Club now uses Noa Noa on Bora Bora, but it has secured land for a much bigger development which will include 600 beds.

If you like a hotel-type holiday Club Med is for you. If you like to arrange your own vacation stay at the hotels. Club Med bookings were reported filled until October when I was in Tahiti last month.

Canadians visiting Tahiti and the rest of French Polynesia require a passport and a valid smallpox vaccination certificate, showing you have received vaccination within the last three years. You can visit without a visa for a period of 15 days. Visas are easily obtained for longer stays.

Most acceptable as souvenirs from Tahiti is the famous pareo material for dresses and skirts for men, as well as general sports wear. Most of the pareo material is printed or hand-blocked in Tahiti and comes in a wondrous variety of colors, designs and patterns. There are also good buys in French perfumes, handicrafts, and mother of pearl shellcraft.

General shopping is a little more expensive than elsewhere, but that is balanced by no taxes and absolutely no tipping.

We found the Tahitian people just as happy and as friendly as we had been led to believe by all the stories about the South Sea Island. They seem to always have a smile and a happy word. In fact we had been in Tahiti only three or four hours before we were invited to stay at a Tahitian home after our hotel visit was finished. "No need to go home right away," we were told. "We have plenty of room at our house."

That offer was repeated right up until our departure, and then it was offered for when we return. And I think I will return... with wife Taffy. I just have to share those friendly islands with her.

member Greater Victoria District Lawn Bowling Association.

The club is steeped in Victoria's history with people like W. Oliphant, for whom Oliphant Street was named, as the first president and R. B. Dunn, an old-time columnist with the Colonist, was the first singles champion in 1911 and went on to become president in 1917.

The pavilion is still based on the original building with an enlargement made in the early 1920s to accommodate a ladies' membership. The park was enclosed prior to the Second World War.

"The members have had to dodge the odd cricket ball. And lately, tennis balls have found their way onto the greens," quipped Mr. McKenchie. "But so far a bowl hasn't found its way onto the pitch or courts."

However, the club has a good rapport with its neighbors and when city archivist Alvin Holmcken unveiled the diamond anniversary memorial on the afternoon of June 14, it was in the form of a drinking fountain for the benefit of tennis players and passers-by as well.

"Most of the competitive bowlers are younger married people," said Mr. McKenchie. "But some of these oldtimers can teach the younger ones a thing or two."

"In some afternoon trips competitions, two of the older fellows may team up to each bowl one-half of an 18-end game. They don't feel they can manage a whole game."

"But if you are too old to bowl, you are too old."

Man of Submarine Deal

hoisted by Rainbow, who severely punished her. She had to return to Ketchikan, where she was interned.

Still another said that Leipzig was beached at the head of Alberni Canal, with her funnel and superstructure shot away.

The prize one, however, said that Leipzig was now drydock at Esquimalt with her stern shot away.

With all this bravado, however, Rainbow escaped an encounter with the Germans. Her two six-inch guns would have had little chance against Leipzig or Nürnberg, sister ships, as it required the 12 six-inch guns of HMS Kent to sink Nürnberg in the battle with Admiral Sturdee's squadron off the Falkland Islands on Dec. 8, 1914. That ended Von Spee's threat.

As usual when war and danger have passed, God and the sailor are forgotten and the politicians cranked up the rumor-mill. No charges were made about the submarine transaction but suggestions of kick-backs, commission and contributions to party funds were bandied about. The Liberals went gunning for McBride's scalp, in view of an approaching election. Not only was McBride the most popular of that day's politicians and had ruled as premier since 1903, but his integrity was not questioned. He considered the criticism of himself and those who had worked with him during the critical days in early August, was grossly unfair and he appealed to Prime Minister Borden to appoint a Royal Commission to review the purchase and examine all documents.

Sir Charles Davidson, formerly chief justice of Quebec, was named to head the commission, which held meetings in Victoria, Vancouver, Ottawa, Montreal and New York.

The commission opened its hearings in Victoria at 11 a.m. on Oct. 2, 1915, a full year after the submarines had arrived at Esquimalt.

At the outset a legal representative of the B.C. Liberal Association asked for the right to cross-examine witnesses. McBride offered no opposition to the request but Mr. Justice Davidson ruled it out.

The hearing went on for days. Paterson came over from Seattle to testify and asked the commissioner the purpose of the investigation. He was told: "It is to discover the truth about the purchase of the submarines." Paterson stated emphatically that he had not paid anyone in Canada a commission.

Lieut. Jones still in command of the subs, testified that the ships were efficient and had met all tests during the year.

Capt. Logan was quite outspoken on the witness stand.

"The treatment I have received has made me indignant and disgusted," he said. "On every side I have been assailed by innuendoes and suggestions of a most malicious kind."

After extensive hearings, Mr. Justice Davidson completely exonerated everyone connected with the purchase.

McBride, in particular, should have received the unquestioned gratitude of all people, politicians included, for his courageous action.

Instead, McBride was to turn over the premiership to his trusty and about-hearted colleague, William J. Bowser, and, at the age of 46, he died in August, 1917.

The submarines continued to serve out of Esquimalt until June 21, 1917, when they were ordered to Halifax and were the first Empire warships to pass through the Panama Canal. In 1920 they were sold.

What about Tom Brown, the mystery man in the deal? The day after he returned to Esquimalt, Aug. 6, he was promoted from vice-reeve to sub-reeve.

"It was the fastest promotion in the Canadian Navy," comments Tom.

He then proceeded to Halifax to serve on the Atlantic and when the Royal Commission was held he was still referred to as "a man named Brown," a "fellow," "a disreputable looking cove" and "a spy."

Nature's Scrapbook

ENZYME SOLUTION DECAYS WOOD

Cellulose enzymes, protein units produced by living organisms, catalyze the decay of cellulose into sugars; other enzymes help break down these sugars into carbon dioxide and water. About one third of all organic material produced is cellulose and, if this were not continually degraded, life as we know it would stagnate within 20 years, due to lack of carbon dioxide. Dead undecayed vegetation would cover the land.

COMPETITION AND NATURE

There are a great many plants and shrubs in the forest, living under tall deciduous trees, that must make an early bed to beat out their bigger rivals in sending forth their leaves. You will notice that these smaller plants or trees are usually two weeks earlier with their leaves than the taller trees since it is necessary for these smaller plants to use this period to manufacture as much food as possible before being shut down from the energy giving light by the leaves of their bigger competitors. If they were unable to beat their bigger rivals in this manner they would soon die.

WESTERN TREE SPECIES

Although there are some 240 species of trees to be found in the forests of North America's Pacific slope, less than 50 have any commercial value today. Most important, of course are the softwoods which include Douglas fir and various species of hemlock, true fir, spruce, pine, cedar, western red cedar, larch, redwood and juniper. Hardwoods of commercial importance include alder, ash, aspen, and cottonwood, birch, laurel, maple, oak and willow.

THE MYSTERIOUS CYCLE

Approximately every 10 years something strange happens to many species of wildlife in Canada's northland. A mysterious catastrophe sweeps across the land and millions upon millions of wild creatures meet their end through a variety of causes. Records of these events are available for more than 250 years thanks largely to old-time fur traders' journals, and it has been found that the cycle averages out at 9.7 years. When the snowshoe rabbit population is at its peak the north country is teeming with life. When the crash comes the contrast is almost unbelievable. The land seems lifeless and only the return of migratory birds in summer restores it to a temporary vitality.

BUTCHER BIRD

Because of his weak feet that are ill-adapted for grasping his prey, the shrike has developed the habit of impaling his victim upon some sharp twig, perhaps the thorn of a hawthorn tree or even the barb of a barbed-wire fence. The prey conveniently secured, he pulls and tears until the carcass is demolished. Sometimes surplus food is stored in this manner for future need, a practice that has earned for the shrike the common name of "butcher bird."

LOOKING ACROSS TO THETIS AND VANCOUVER ISLANDS.

RAGGED ISLETS

With super, colossal and stupendous being the idiom of the day it is rather fun to happen upon something lilliputian and unpretentious in size. On a recent outing we had been slowly making our way by boat along the coastline of the northern end of Thetis Island. We had food and camping gear aboard, and with a destination unknown attitude we were exploring with an eye to any inviting corner of beauty which would offer seclusion. Leaving the shore of Thetis we headed for the insignificant dots on the chart which were named rather appropriately, Ragged Islets.

As we neared the shore for a closer inspection we pondered the possibility of an overnight stay. Trees and grass could be seen and the prospect looked inviting. Sitting atop a solitary fir tree an eagle viewed our coming with suspicion. He soon took to flight and we watched him soar over our heads as we approached. Our attention was then diverted to the water as we searched its depths for the hidden danger of rocks. Closer now to shore, we were fascinated with the shell, bleached a dazzling white, which took the place of sand at the water's edge.

Beyond the shell was a rim of sandstone rock flattened into a natural promenade which circumvented most of the larger of the islets. A walk around this tiny isle could be accomplished in minutes. Nonetheless, because of the multitude of pictures housed here, a photographer could make it quite an excursion! The larger islet was covered in a thick growth of green grass. Camass, too, could be seen as it tossed its blue head skyward as it competed for a place to flourish. Seeking a path through the grass was a strenuous task as the grass wound unexpectedly around the ankles and tripped the would be intruder.

Stepping unwarily could mean momentary disaster as hidden pieces of rotten branches would suddenly give under the weight of the explorer. Here too, was a network of trails made by nesting seagulls who had at an earlier time of the year made this a home for the rearing of the young birds. We were thankful we weren't intruding on this spectacle, interesting though it must be. Seagulls in abundance were still to be found but it seemed curious to us, with little ornithological knowledge, that only the white (mature) gulls were to be seen. None of the grey-plumed birds were in the colony at all.

The gulls for the most part, adorned the rocks, driftwood and scraggy branches of the trees, only occasionally circling the area as though the heat of the day made unnecessary movement undesirable. We soon became accustomed to the constant barrage of their chatter.

Inspecting the base of the fir tree confirmed our earlier speculation that this was designated as eagle territory. Sure enough the ground was littered with the remains of the big bird's meals. Pieces of small birds, crab legs, and bits of bone were to be seen as well as one or two eagle feathers.

Juniper grew in its customary fashion of hugging the ground. Its branches twisting and turning as though forever pleading for its very existence. The stark beauty of the silvered branches of the dead juniper were a constant source of delight. As the sun struck them from an ever changing angle the camera was kept busy trying to capture the mood of the moment.

A rugged stump of what must have been a magnificent arbutus tree still stood proudly facing to sea. Now instead of reaching its leafy branches skyward its broken off trunk and remaining pieces of branches took on the appearance of an old Indian totem with a man-figure speaking and gesturing to an unseen audience.

Beside this fertile islet sat another which was a barren mass of rock and appeared to serve no other purpose than to make a sheltered bay for our boat. At sunset, however, the gulls chose this as a meeting place to congregate and discuss the day's happenings and plan the one to come. This evening ritual we found most interesting and watched in fascination as they rimmed the rocky outcropping in silhouette as the sun slowly slipped behind a distant hill. We too prepared for sleep, having chosen a site over the white shell of the beach where there was just room enough above high water mark.

During the day, while I had been hopping from picture to picture with a camera, Robbie, my inventive spouse, had fashioned our sleeping quarters. Among his accomplishments is a generous helping of ingenuity and he had managed to find the only two planks on the entire islet that were wide enough, flat enough, and long enough to hold the air mattresses. These he had fashioned into a platform between two large driftwood logs which were conveniently situated parallel to the water's edge about six feet apart. Thus it was, that, as the seagulls flew off to some distant spot for the night, we too, settled into our very comfortable quarters under the stars. With the gentle lapping of the water of high tide caressing the end of our "bed" we were soon lulled to sleep.

A good hour before sunrise, with just a suspicion of the sun's glow on the horizon, we were awakened by the raucous screeching of the returning birds. I looked at the time. Four forty-five a.m.! The gulls were holding family council and were joined by a family or two of ducks. They all seemed to be calmly though noisily waiting for the great burst of sun that would soon be upon us. Though somewhat more sleepily, I, too, managed to get into the enthusiasm of the moment and lay with one hand on my camera and an eye on the eastern horizon.

After an hour of suspense the sun finally jumped up and over the distant mountain with a youthful vigor. With no clouds to gentle the sun's arrival it truly arrived at top speed. After this "happening" there was no more sleep for me. The day had an up-and-at-it feeling and pretty soon the smell of coffee and cooking bacon and eggs had roused the other seemingly lifeless form from his sleeping place.

The boat bobbing at anchor just off shore beckoned restlessly for further adventure. We were not long in packing our gear and climbing aboard. We left the islets for further explorations knowing full well that we would always remember these tiny, picturesque Ragged Islets.
